WATERTOWN and Syracuse business men have organized a company to purchase the Franklin Arcade building, Watertown, from Frank A. Bonadio. The plan is to convert the place into a motion picture house, the proportions of which will be so large as to eclipse any other picture house in Northern New York State.

QUEEN THEATRE, SEATING TWO THOUSAND, OPENS IN WILMINGTON

THE Queen Theatre, Fifth and Market streets, Wilmington, Delaware, recently opened, has a seating capacity of 2,000. While it will be used mostly for moving pictures it is also adapted to stage purposes. The dimensions of the house are 65 by 150 feet.

The lobby is 22 by 50 feet. The walls are wainscotted with marble to a height of eight feet and caen stone is used above that point.

The attractive part of the lobby is the fact that there are no steps. From the front entrance a gentle slope leads to the first floor. On both sides of the lobby are inclines upward, which lead to the first balcony. The interior is strikingly handsome.

The seats are upholstered in Fabrikoid. This material is clean, neat and gives a luxurious appearance to the theatre. It not only adds to the pppearance of the house, but also is a decided advertising point for the house with a local and continuous appeal.

Fabrikoid is an artificial leather preparation which is manufactured with a basis of strong, tightly woven cotton cloth into which the outside coating penetrates so that the cloth and coating become one. This is in turn grained so that the casual observer could not tell whether it is the natural grain leather or not.

How the selection of the word Queen for the theatre came about is novel. For more than a century the site where the theatre now stands has held a peculiarly intimate community interest for the people of Wilmington. On the same spot, when the city was little more than a village, stood the old Queen Hotel. Here much history was made, social and civic functions held, and the community activity centered.

After the passing of this ancient place of abode, came the Clayton House. Now it has been supplanted by the Queen theatre, thus reviving the old interest.

Music and the Picture

Edited by Ernst Luz

This department is maintained for the exhibitor's assistance with a view of suggesting proper musical illustrations for current photo plays. MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be pleased to help solve any difficulties the exhibitors may have with their musical programs. All communications should be addressed to the Music and the Picture Department.

Does Your Music Make Meaning in Scenes "Talk"?

Are Exhibitors Getting Most Out of Their Music?—Need of Industry Is Not Alone "Better Music," for Practically Every Theatre Is Improving Its Scores—More Perfect Synchronization of Sound and Vision Is Really the Requirement—How Can It Be Obtained

By B. A. Holway

ARE exhibitors getting the most out of their music? Are they getting from their photoplays all that the screen action contains? Are they reaching and presenting to their patrons the underlying meaning of each scene?

These questions would seem to one who has given considerable thought and close application to the study of the science of motion picture presentation to be of paramount importance. The time has come in the development of the motion picture industry when the pictures should be made to "talk"—to appeal to the auditory sense as strongly as to the vision. Through what medium can this be better accomplished than through that of music for and about the picture?

Whatever may be the possibilities of the talking picture in the future, it is a recognized fact that today the Edison plan is not commercially practicable. Hence with the industry developing rapidly along other lines, some substitution must be found for the spoken words and auditory expression of the action on the screen.

The slogan "Better music" is splendid and a worthy development in the progress of the industry, the future of which is destined to reveal even greater things than have been possible in the past. But does it go far enough? Does it really express the true requirements of the exhibitor and of the photoplays? Does it really cover the broad field that lies before the earnest practical showman?

Better Synchronization of Sound and Vision Needed

The need of the industry today is not alone better music. Practically every theatre in the country is giving its patrons "better music." What is really needed is the more perfect synchronization of sound and vision—the development of musical accompaniment that does more than just follow in a general way the theme of the pictured story; that gets under the surface and brings out the subtle meaning of the plot; that makes the picture seem more real, more alive—to fairly "talk."

How may this result be obtained? is the logical question that every exhibitor will ask. How, indeed?

Answers to this question are very likely to be many and varied, for each will be based either on individual experience or preconceived ideas.

To the writer, basing his beliefs on practical experience as a theatre manager, and his efforts to bring out through the medium of his music, the underlying principles and features of the photoplays he has presented, the only logical and practical solution of the problem for the average exhibitor lies in the one-man orchestra—the "Fotoplayer" type of instrument, controlled by one man and so adaptable at all times to every requirement of the screen.

Experience with orchestras in the picture theatres has taught the writer that while some very wonderful effects are obtainable, orchestras are after all but composed of individual human units, subject to physical and mental fatigue, each thinking for himself and dependent upon one central mind. In theatres of the Strand type and magnitude where large orchestras are an economic possibility, results may be achieved perhaps impossible in other ways. That point is one that is open to argument.

Development of Unit Orchestra

For the average theatre, however, an orchestra of the magnitude and tonal quality possible in a theatre of the Strand type is entirely impracticable and from an economic standpoint out of the question. Yet unless a large orchestra composed of skilled musicians, and consequently high salaried men, is possible, orchestral music is impractical where the best results are desired.

The development of the unit orchestra has been a step in the direction of the ultimate solution of this problem, but again there are difficulties in the way that frequently make for added expense, an item that every exhibitor, if he would be successful in these days of close competition must avoid as he would a pestilence.

Experience along these lines has taught the writer that the final solution of the music problem will be found in a combination of the manually played instruments and the automatic. The practical application of the player-piano principle to the one-man orchestra, allowing perfect control of both orchestration and tempo at all times, should go a long way toward solving the question of good music played directly to the pictures.

The writer does not altogether agree with the ideas expressed in a recent issue of Moving Picture News anent the subject of modulation. As applied to the one-man orchestra of the type operated by music rolls under perfect control in every respect, the writer believes that modulation will go a very long ways toward solving many of the problems herein stated.

Nor can the writer convince himself that under many circumstances modulations are not infinitely better and more pleasing to the audience than abrupt transitions from one number to another.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Mr. Holway's article deals very thoroughly with the problem of economy, which is undoubtedly worrying hundreds of exhibitors all over the country. It is a known fact that the greater the competition, the more difficult to practice economy. There are, however, hundreds of theatres throughout the country thriving with orchestras, which in size, cannot compare with the Strand Theatre. It is also a known fact that the smaller a musical combination, the more able must be the musician.

My experience has taught me that when the salary is fair, that which is required is the obtaining of capable men, which depends entirely upon the man who selects them. To the exhibitor who must practice musical economy, there is but one substitute; namely, the unit instrument or one man orchestra. I agree, that when the orchestra of hman units is subjected to physical and mental fatigue, good results cannot be obtained. This has been the greatest factor in making the necessary installation of unit instruments or organs.

Where the best possible musical entertainment is desired or required in the picture theatre, everything obtainable in the line of musical equipment can be used, the lone piano or piano and drums excepted. I fear that along the line of modulations we will have to disagree. My convictions as stated in the article you mention, are based upon experiences obtained by catering to a daily audience numbering 100,000.

I am a lover of orchestral music and appreciate the human music. Knowing that there is an unestimable number of others that feel just as I do, I do want to champion the orchestra, whenever it is a financial possibility. Knowing as I do that no exhibitor would be foolish enough to install a musical proposition which he cannot afford, and advising him that should he try to obtain orchestral picture theatre music for half the salary that would be considered fairly good professional remuneration, he will surely obtain something that can only be detrimental to his business, in which case he would be greatly benefited by the installation of one of the modern unit instruments or one man orchestras.

WANTS SELECTIONS FOR WAR PICTURES AND FILMS SHOWING SOLDIERS IN ACTION

John G. Pinkerton, McConnellsville, O.—Can you suggest several selections suitable for such a picture as "The Battles of a Nation," or any film showing soldiers in action?

I have Lake's "Temptest," and thought that could be played in battle scenes. The war scenes showing foreign battle fields seem popular this year, and I wish to have a good selection of music on hand.

ANS.—You give me a very difficult task, as all pictures depicting war or battle scenes differ. Lake's "Temptest" and "The Battle Hurry" in the Lake collections as published by Carl Fischer are both very good for battle scenes.

The most difficult in setting musical programs to pictures based entirely on war is the placing of quiet numbers, which are more enjoyed by the audience.

Good numbers for panoramic war scenes when they are lengthy are "Light Cavalry," "Jolly Robbers," "Tambour de Garde" and "To Arms" overtures. All other boisterous action of a lesser length should be fit with military marches, battle hurries or heavy gallops.

In all war pictures you will find opportunities for the placing of quiet numbers, such as waltzes or other romantic numbers. The use of these numbers is imperative when a love story or a story of pathos runs throughout the picture.

I would suggest that when you have a war film, that you make a special effort to see the picture prior to its initial performance, as tumultuous music in over-abundance is never appreciated by the theatre audience.

PARAMOUNT ARRANGES WITH SCHIRMER FOR MUSICAL SCORES TO ACCOMPANY FEATURES

THE Paramount Pictures Corporation has arranged through G. Schirmer, Inc., to furnish specially written scores for all Paramount pictures, starting with the "Heart of Paula," a Pallas, in which Lenore Ulrich is starred and released April 3.

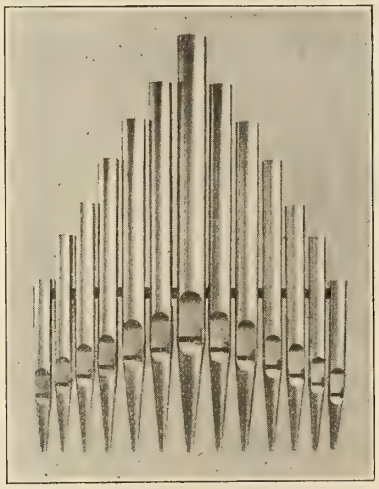
These scores will be so arranged that they can be used for any size orchestra from a single pianist to the largest symphony orchestra. They will include selections from the popular songs of the day, comic and grand opera, as well as movements from the foremost symphonies in the galleries of musical portraiture.

The music will consist of a complete score for a twelve-piece orchestra composed of the following parts: piano, extra piano (for use of organ), first violin, second violin, viola, cello, bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, drums.

In addition to the music for the twenty-piece orchestra, there will be shipped for each print, two sets of eight extra parts as follows: one conductor, two extra first violins, one second cornet, one oboe, one bassoon, two horns.

Through the use of these scores each production will be treated in a distinctively different manner, the comics being supplied with light, airy music designed to assist in carrying the audience along with the action of the screen, while in the "dramatic" productions, music will be used which will emphasize through the medium of tone the portrayal which is being presented upon the screen.

These scores will be furnished to the exhibitors by the Paramount exchanges upon a rental basis.



The Kimball Theatre Organ

is a true one-man orchestra, although it is not usually so designated. It places under the control of the player greater and more varied resources than are embodied in a large theatre orchestra of individual performers. It provides better music with greater economy. It accompanies pictures as no orchestra can possibly do.

Let us show you how.

WANTS MEETING OF MUSICIANS CALLED TO THRESH OUT CONFLICTING PICTURE MUSIC THEORIES

"J. F. HAMMOND'S article in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, together with the reply of the musical editor, contains much that is of more than passing interest. Mr. Hammond's points are in the main thoughtfully chosen, the only fault being, to my mind, that he has attempted to cover too much ground in too short a space, but I happen to know that the original intention was to expand the article considerably, and consequently to dwell more fully on the various aspects of the situation," says Herbert Henderson.

"The important point seems to me to be not in the contention that the present system of mixing up the various composers and periods is an artistic failure or in the reply that contention has brought forward, but the admission of both writers that we must look to the living composers for our future photodramatic music.

"If we can only agree on that one point we shall have gone far, because, whatever difficulties may loom up before us (and they are more numerous than some of us perhaps realize), we shall be able to meet them with a united front and to minimize the possibility of our ideals being sidetracked by less important details.

"There are too many enthusiasts in the field to allow matters to stand still, but this very enthusiasm seems likely to cause a confliction of ideas which may retard to a great extent the very object for which we are aiming.

"What then is the best means to further our object? I venture to suggest that, interesting as the articles in MOTION PICTURE NEWS are, they must from their very nature be limited in their usefulness, and that an hour or two of personal exchange of views would achieve far wider results.

"Would it not be possible to convene a representative meeting where this all-important subject might be discussed? It is quite within the bound of possibility that among the readers of this paper there may be some who, while hesitating to rush into print, may have useful suggestions to offer. Let us give some of them the opportunity to place their views of the present and future of photodramatic music before us. We nurse our individual ideas and ideals too much. There is, because of the lack of opportunity and co-operation to exchange our views, a tendency to think that we personally have the only solution of the matter in our hands. I submit this suggestion to Mr. Luz for his earnest consideration."

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Were it within my power to do so, I would have every exhibitor and picture musician read this letter from Herbert Henderson. As he says, the time has arrived when there should be some means whereby the many who are interested in picture music should have the means of conveying their individual ideas to the many, so as to make them universally useful, when practical.

This department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is open to all, and its original and present intentions are to give publicity as well as help, when possible, to those who are interested in picture music. I want to reassure all readers that it is our personal intention at all times to treat all communications in the most courteous manner, and we want to especially state that we do not desire our editorial notes to be considered criticisms.

Just as all beneficial thought is the result of a positive and negative thought and as all the useful elements of life are the result of a positive and negative condition, it is very likely that the best in picture music will be the result of positive and negative ideas.

Therefore, we never take from any of our communications any part, whether it conflicts with our personal views or not. The editorial notes should be considered nothing more than the negative thought. Both appear together as an additional inducement to make the many think; consequently, we should feel ourselves very much misjudged, were our editorial notes considered offensive. The contrary should be the case.

I want to personally assure my readers that I appreciate the communications that disagree with my personal views more than any others. While idle flattery may add somewhat to the fire of ambition, nevertheless it is not the intention of this department to exploit the views of any one person (the editor not excepted), but to excite universal interest in picture music, which should be uppermost in our minds at all time.

Music Notes: This picture is very dramatic throughout. Special care should be taken in selecting numbers of strictly dramatic appeal. Remember that heavy effects are better obtained with numbers written in minor keys.

The picture should open with a canary bird imitation, which is designated as No. 1 in the plot. No. 2 should be a semi-slow number; No. 3, a slow waltz; No. 4 should be a strictly dramatic number; No. 5 should be a 2/4 number with a minor key predominant; Nos. 6, 13, 19 and 20 should be all slow numbers of positive dramatic effect.

Number seven should be a waltz lento in minor key, played slow and legato; Nos. 18 and 25 should be slow waltzes in major key; No. 9 should be a concert waltz with a short introduction; No. 11, a 2/4 intermezzo in major key; No. 12, an ordinary waltz; No. 17 should be a slow number having a pathetic appeal as well as a dramatic effect.

Nos. 8, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23 and 24 are all melodramatic numbers as suggested in plot. Melodramatic effects in this picture are not well suited for the organ, nevertheless the heavy dramatic appeals can be appropriately accompanied on the organ.

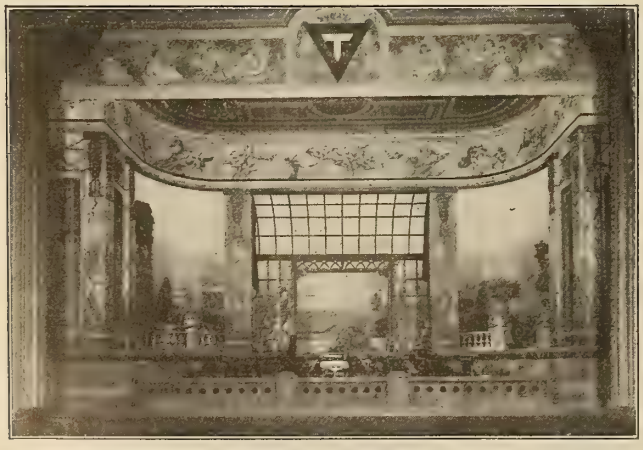
Stage Settings Transform Theatre Into Fairy Land

Well Designed Sets Help Keep Up Illusion of Delightful Unreality, Making the House and Its Entertainment More Attractive for Patrons—Far-Seeing Exhibitors Who Are Anxious to Make Their Places Additionally Alluring to Public Are Installing Scenic Art Effects

By P. L. LANDIS



S. L. ROTHAPFEL, the exhibitor genius, considers that three things are absolutely essential for a high-class photoplay house—good pictures, good music, and a good stage-setting. Everyone concedes the necessity of the first two, but there are many who have not realized the tremendous possibilities of a well-designed setting.

In the opinion of the writer, the time is not far distant when a picture theatre with a bare stage will be as uncommon as one without music. Whenever one theatre in a town has installed an artistic set, the people have flocked to that house, have given it an incalculable amount of word-of-mouth advertising; and the money expended for the improvement has come back a hundred-fold to the box-office.

This success is caused not simply by the novelty of the device, but its popularity continues because the setting actually increases the audience's enjoyment of the films. There is a scientific reason for this.

Imagine that you have on your stage a scene showing a portion of a Roman villa. Through the solid pillars you see a lake in the background, with mountains on either side. Even though the stage is only forty feet wide and fifteen deep, the illusion of vast space is created in your mind.

Now the lights are dimmed gradually and the twilight effect fades into total darkness. The screen, which has been out of sight, is lowered, and the film is projected onto it. Instead of looking at a picture of 15 x 11 feet, for instance, you think you see a vast panorama in which the shadow characters seem living people unhampered by the limitations of a small area—the optical illusion of great space has been created.

Bare Whiteness of Screen Is Concealed

After the picture is finished, the screen is raised, unseen by the audience, and almost imperceptibly the lights on the stage grow brighter. Instead of seeing a mocking, ugly square of white, the audience sees once more the idealistic beauty of pastoral scenery.

The eyes have not been strained by a quick change from darkness to light, and the imagination has not been jolted from the romance of the screen to the uncouth reality of an unlovely stage.

If these statements do not seem possible, you can easily verify them by visiting a theatre where a set is used, or better still, see the same picture in a house not equipped with a stage-setting, and then view it in a theatre that has one.

STAGE SETTING LIKE THIS PUTS AUDIENCE IN PLEASANT AND RECEPTIVE STATE OF MIND BEFORE PICTURE IS FLASHED ON SCREEN

Of course the scenic requirements of a cinema tneatre are different from those of the legitimate theatre. In the latter, the settings must be constructed so that they may be removed in a few minutes, but the picture house set is permanent and need not be moved. This fact permits the builder of sets for the photoplay theatre to make his work far more substantial and effective.

Instead of flimsy "wings," solid pillars and real pergolas can be used, and a scientifically constructed cyclorama takes the place of the "back drop." The best scenic artists and lighting engineers, realizing that this new outlet for their efforts gives their work more permanency and greater possibilities, are now contributing their original ideas to perfect the picture sets.

Can Duplicate All Lighting Effects in Nature

There is absolutely no lighting phenomenon in nature that cannot be faithfully reproduced on a modern picture theatre setting. The curved, neutral-tinted background can be made to reflect any color by means of the improved lighting methods these sets have introduced. The weirdly beautiful effects originated by Bakst, Granville Barker and Urban can be infinitely better carried out on one of these settings than in the ordinary theatre. If your orchestra or organist plays an overture, every mood of the music can be reflected in the lighting of the set. No expert electrician is needed to operate the switches, for the simplicity of the mechanism allows any usher to do it easily.

The real showmen among the exhibitors, the men with a vision, are eager to make their theatres just as good as they can. These men, who want to be the first to reap the benefit of a revolutionary improvement, have investigated the stage-setting, have found it worth-while, and are now installing them.

CRESCENT THEATRE IN NEW ORLEANS CLOSES AFTER 28-WEEK SEASON.

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

New Orleans, April 1.

AFTER operating on a twenty-five-cent policy for eight weeks, the Crescent theatre, a local K. and E. legitimate house converted to the screen and the Paramount program two months ago, was summarily closed by Klaw and Erlanger on Sunday, March 19, despite efforts on the part of the Paramount representatives and manager of the theatre, W. Fred Bossner, to keep the house open.

The Paramount Company was the pioneer in the New Orleans field in spending thousands of dollars in converting the Crescent into a film house, and, despite the fact that hundreds of Orleanians waxed enthusiastic over the splendid program, opened at a loss, so far as the Crescent was concerned, in which Klaw and Erlanger shared. The Crescent was being operated on a partnership basis, the Paramount Company supplying the films, and Klaw and Erlanger the house. It was a fifty-fifty arrangement, each to share equally in profits or loss.

A few weeks ago, Klaw and Erlanger, unwilling to continue the agreement in face of the financial loss that the theatre was registering weekly, notified the Paramount Company to that effect. On Friday, Tom Campbell, local representative of K. and E., received a telegram from New York advising him to close the house. Mr. Bossner got a telegram altogether different, in that it instructed him to keep the house running until March 24.

From then on it became a matter of wits and injunctions—principaly the latter.

CHATTANOOGA LABOR UNION GOES ON RECORD IN FAVOR OF SUNDAY OPENING

AT the regular meeting of the Central Labor Union, Chattanooga, Tenn., that body went on record as favoring the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday. Resolutions to this effect were adopted.

In these Gov. Rye was requested to "indorse and approve the enactment of such a law as will permit the operation of motion picture shows on Sunday."

The resolutions had previously been unanimously adopted by the unions of moving picture machine operators and musicians there and came up to the Central body from the two unions.

The signers of the resolutions were Elbert Lowry, president of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union; J. O. Bachtel, president of the Musicians Union, and J. Cohen, president of the Central Labor Union. W. T. Powell, president of the Central Labor Union, Memphis, Tenn., spoke in favor of Sunday motion pictures.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee recently decided that motion picture theatres cannot be operated on Sunday.

SAMUELS RETURNS FROM TRIP FOR FOTO PLAYER COMPANY

B. L. SAMUELS, special representative of the American Foto Player Company, 62 West Forty-fifth street, New York, has just returned from a five weeks' trip through New York state.

He says he found business conditions excellent everywhere. He was especially successful during this trip in getting in touch with many of the largest exhibitors who are contemplating installing Foto Players in their theatres.

KATHOL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC., WILL MAKE DR. THATCHER'S PRODUCT

DR. CHARLES J. THATCHER announces that Kathol, the product which he has been manufacturing as a substitute for the imported photographic developers, has been taken over by the Kathol Manufacturing Company, Inc., with headquarters at Riverdale avenue and 230th street, New York.

The entire business and plant of Dr. Thatcher and the right to manufacture the product have been acquired by this corporation, which is now in a position to go on with the business actively.

The theatre is controlled by the Wilmington Amusement Company and is managed by Joseph N. Ginns. The house was designed by the Hoffman Company, Philadelphia architects. The building is a substantial structure of concrete and steel.

Arrangements for heating and ventilating are the most complete, comprising three exhaust fans, six ventilators in the roof and a very large exhaust fan for the middle of the house. The structure is thoroughly heated by steam and an elaborate electric light system has been installed.

A Power's 6-B machine is in use and the length of the throw is 150 feet. The pictures are projected on a Mirroroid screen. The Haywood company furnished the seats, designed for wide aisles and the comfort of the patrons. The musical equipment consists of a Mueller organ and a ten-piece orchestra. An electric four-part automatic ticket seller is installed in the cashier's booth.

The Queen is located in the business section of Wilmington and uses Triangle service at admission prices varying from five cents to twenty-five cents.

KRAUS MAKES CUTOUTS OF PRIZE FIGHT FILMS

WORKING in conjunction with the Champion Sports Exposition Company who had the picture privilege at the recent Willard-Moran heavyweight championship fight, the Kraus Manufacturing Company has prepared a series of slides made from cutouts of the film taken at the ringside.

These slides consist of very clear effective pictures of the interesting action and incidents during the fight.

The Champion Exports Exposition Company purchased the picture rights to this fight at considerable cost. The company equipped the ringside with Cooper-Hewitt lights and had five cameras at work from different points of vantage about the ring. As a consequence the scenes from which these slides were made are full of action and show the most interesting parts of the fight.

These slides can be purchased from the Champion Sports Exposition Company or the Kraus Manufacturing Company.

There is a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which prevents the transportation of motion pictures of a prize fight from one state to another; also prevents the importation of a prize fight motion picture into any state of the Union.

Slides give the exhibitor in any state, except New York, the only opportunity of projecting pictures of this prize fight.

CARD ISSUED BY BRADY TO EXHIBITORS IS PUNCHED FOR POSTERS ON RENTAL

THE Dick Brady Poster Rental Company, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, has devised a new plan for dealing with the exhibitor. The company is now using a card which is sold to the theatre owner and when he uses the posters on a rental basis, the amount of each sale is punched out. This method has simplified the firm's bookeeping and has done away with the necessary handling of hundreds of accounts. Mr. Brady claims his new system is very successful.

VITAGRAPH

Many of the world's greatest statesmen, authors, artists, actors, publishers and business men witnessed the premier showing of

"SALVATION JOAN"

at the Fulton Theatre, New York City, on Sunday evening, April 9th. This special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature presents supported by an all star Vitagraph cast. It was received with an ovation which a New York audience seldom gives.

It is now playing to capacity at every performance and even the most blase Broadwayite enthuses over

"SALVATION JOAN"

This feature was produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Albert E. Smith and Mr. J. Stuart Blackton. They believed it would be popular, but its reception has gone even beyond their expectations.

LEADING THE WAY

* * * * The next resolution passed unanimously. It read as follows:—"The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is opposed to the program system now enforced by a majority of producers and we favor a system of open booking."

Open-Booking

* * * "The only remedy for such obviously inequitable conditions is the 'open-booking' method of renting films, and the 'box office value' price system—two policies instituted by the Big Four, which combine to market every film of every manufacturer independently of every film of every other manufacturer, at a price based on the actual drawing power of each production.

"These policies were adopted by the V. L. S. E. at its very inception. In fact, it is entirely within the bounds of conservatism to say that this company was formed for the purpose of overcoming the reactionary conditions which almost universally existed in the moving picture industry.

"We determined at the start to be an exception to the rule—to institute the keenest possible competition between the associated manufacturers making up this company, a competition in which each would be bound to try and outdo the other in the size of their investment and the consequent merit of their product. To this end we inaugurated the 'open-booking' and 'box office value' methods in marketing our productions.

Penalty on Poor Pictures

"The 'open-booking' policy as operated by the Big Four places a penalty upon poor pictures and rewards the good ones, for each manufacturer obtains the proceeds solely from his own pictures and those can only be consistent with the merits of their output. The hope of the film industry lies in merit being the sole measure of reward.

"But until the Big Four established the 'open-booking' and 'box office value' policies, films were always sold on the basis that they were of equal merit and co-ordinate drawing power, and every exhibitor was tied by a contract under which he was compelled to take the entire output of a feature distributing company, whether or not a part of it lacked merit or was unsuitable to his audience.

"How much fairer it is - how much more common business sense, to have a man come in and see a picture on the screen before he buys it—to let him judge of a picture's value for his particular patronage for himself—to let him take what he wants—to use it when he wants it and for as long as he wants it."

THE SECRET OF A FULL TILL

An Advertisement From the Pen of one of America's Most Successful Exhibitors

By A. W. Walker

The H. L. Walker Circuit of Theatres
Aberdeen, South Dakota

In these days of keen and aggressive competition among exhibitors as well as the producers of the photoplays, we, who have studied the situation, are beginning to wonder what the outcome will be of the chaotic state of affairs that apparently exists throughout the moving picture industry.

Co-operation is, and will be, the secret of success. A sort of partnership should exist between the producer and exhibitor. Each needs the other's good will and assistance in order to make the business of each a success.

The producer who is willing to meet the exhibitor half way, to extend to him every legitimate courtesy possible, to assist him in properly and judiciously advertising his theatre and the films shown therein, and to comply with his wishes in so far as is possible, will be busy hiring more clerks, bookkeepers and treasurers, and clipping coupons from gilt-edged bonds, while the sheriff is turning the key in the other fellow's door.

In all of our dealings with "The Big Four" we have found them to be "The Successful Producer."

We have received hearty co-operation. Our advertising is always sent to us sufficiently in advance to enable us to use it to the best advantage. When we ask a reasonable favor, they grant it, freely and willingly. We have received a square deal. And, last, but not least, V. L. S. E. productions, in my opinion, are second to none. Let the good work go on, and with it, the good will and friendship of every "Big Four" exhibitor.

has produced the biggest crowds for exhibitors in the history of chaptered photonovels.

"The Girl and The Game has met with an unqualified success at our theatre, as our business is satisfying to the extreme. Even wind storms and inclement weather in general do not keep away our patrons when they want to see the intrepid Helen Holmes in her thrilling deeds of The Girl and The Game."
C. W. Wonderly, Wonderly Theater, La Junta, Calif.

"— The Girl and the Game is a humdinger of a serial. It is beating all my previous records for attendance; my patrons like it, and each week shows an advance over the previous attendance. It's the best crowd getter we have ever shown."
D. C. Lung, Tulane Theatre, Oakdale, La.

"I have shown The Girl and The Game to a capacity house each and every night I have run same, and I will recommend it to any exhibitor who wants a big drawing card."
Henry Burge, Collinsville, Ill.

"We have played three chapters of 'The Girl and The Game' and have had a record business on it. This is the best business getter we have ever had in our house. We have had an increase in receipts with each chapter, and expect it to bring them to the box office the entire fifteen chapters."
Geo. W. Brown, Hippodrome Theatre
Williamson, W. Va.

"It is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to congratulate you on the greatest of all serial stories in The Girl and The Game. It is the first continued film that has shown a pronounced punch in every chapter. The artistic acting of Miss Helen Holmes will go down in history, as her daring feats are the talk of the neighborhood. Mr. McGowan is, in my judgment, the most wonderful producer we have yet seen."

GLORIA'S ROMANCE

A MOTION PICTURE NOVEL BY MR. & MRS. RUPERT HUGHES

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT heralds the coming of a work of photographic literature that strikes a new note in artistic attainment.

We announce for release throughout the United States, beginning Monday, May Twenty-Second, a novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, which will be presented in twenty chapters in motion picture form through the leading theatres and in novelized form through the leading newspapers. A new, two-reel chapter will be released each week through the Kleine Exchanges.

The factors that make this the year's most distinctive achievement in the art of filmcraft are:

The Star: Miss Billie Burke
The Supporting Cast headed by Mr. Henry Kolker
The Authors: Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes
The Producer: George Kleine

This production offers exhibitors an exceptional opportunity for tremendous box-office receipts for twenty weeks. Never before has such a remarkable cast been assembled for a serial production. Never before has such a costly and magnificent subject been presented. Never before has such a powerful work of literature been screened. Leading exhibitors are now invited to apply for this attraction.

Lillian Gish in Sold for Marriage

Lillian Gish possesses a certain charm that makes you love her. You can feel your heart as you share with her her joys and pleasures. Your eyes begin to fill as you watch her in misfortune. You have felt all this in her previous successes and in "Sold for Marriage" she repeats her former triumphs.

Do you believe in the sale of girls for marriage?

Do you think the young people should be permitted to pick out their own mates, or should they be required to accept the selection of their parents? When your patrons have seen this picture they will be ready to answer the questions and discuss them with great interest.

For the week of April 16th the TRIANGLE Fine-Arts Play will be Lillian Gish in "Sold for Marriage"—a picture which is sure to reach right down to the hearts of your patrons and "get" them. Never for a moment does their interests falter and at the end of the fifth reel they only regret the end has arrived.

The success of an actress is dependent on that indefinable something that strikes the spot, her personality that commands instant approval. It is a matter of talent and charm.

"Sold for Marriage"

presents American immigrants in a rarely sympathetic light and for this reason will carry home a valuable lesson to all those who witness it.

Lillian Gish takes the part of Marfa, a beautiful young Russian girl adored by all the young men of the Village, but especially by Jan. Marfa and her uncle depart for America and are greatly pleased to find Jan on board. Arriving in America they are met by the uncle's brother who has completed arrangements for the sale of Marfa. By physical force Jan tries to rescue the girl but is unsuccessful. The final outcome of the story takes one through much thrilling action.

"The Stepping Stone"

The TRIANGLE-Ince picture to be released this same week is one that is bound to strike a responsive cord in the heart of every woman.

How many loving wives struggle from morning until night, scrimp and save for the sake of an unappreciative husband who in the end when success has arrived is likely to cast her aside for some pretty wallflower. These questions and many others of vital interest form the keynote of this play.

Then there are two Keystones that are bound to furnish reams of laughter for every audience.

Starving the Screen

"HOW did you like it?" asked the manager of a Broadway neighborhood house the other evening, referring to his evening's feature.

"I could hardly sit through it," I answered.

"I didn't," he replied, "I'd rather look at the lobby."

"Well," he went on, resignedly, "It's on the program. I am confronted by this sort of thing right along. I get all my pictures in advance and half of those I take I wonder how an audience can stand them."

THE day following I met the owner of one of the biggest picture theatre interests in the country. His statement demands the most serious consideration.

Said he: "I look for only two years more of the present popularity of motion pictures."

My own opinion is that his judgment is wholly wrong. But there's only one thing that stands in the way of the calamity he foretells—and that is better pictures, and there's only one factor who can prevent this crash—and that he is the producer.

DOES he sense the fact?

I seriously doubt it. There's not a producer today who will agree with you on the necessity of better pictures. He'll tell you of this necessity before you can tell him.

He'll emphasize the great fundamental value of the story, etc., etc.; and then in most instances, and for some reason—to catch a release, or because he really doesn't believe in his heart what he says, or because his organization is not sincere or able—he'll turn and—just footage, just the same poor kind of pictures that through consistent and overwhelming production have done most to bring about the one and acute condition in this industry.

And just the kind of footage that, if obstinately continued, will hurt the future, the great future of the photoplay and the vast possibilities of motion photography.

WHAT on earth is the matter? Haven't we enough capable producers to furnish a few thousand theatres with good pictures? Or is the whole scheme of showing motion pictures wrong? I mean, is the system of distribution and exhibition so radically wrong that we can't produce enough good pictures to meet its faults?

We'll have to answer the question pretty soon—some way.

WE have spoken often of the close similarity between pictures and publications—emphasizing the fact that pictures must be as good as popular magazines and books.

Today they are not; within two years they must be, if they are to exist.

I, for one, would rather spend my evenings reading than at picture shows—this despite my charitable and intense interest in the latter. The good pictures are a delight; and facing any audience today anywhere is the deadly percentage of mere footage.

FOR the least effect of this is upon the writer—the photodramatist of the future, the factor we must have to make pictures hold the great public.

He regards the motion picture as "movies." He has little inspiration to put forth his best. No money offered will attract him, but the medium of expression as he sees it, he'll give his poorest effort, assuming that it doesn't want his best. He thinks that pictures rely most upon the mechanics of the camera, upon lavish sets, great mob scenes, high-salaried stars, and author's names.

Of course, he's 'way wrong; but the general run of pictures he sees don't tell him so.

THE fact of the matter is that the best pictures, pictures, too, that are the best box office successes and that get rebookings, are pictures with "something in them," something that strikes a chord in the heart and mind of the average audience, pictures with a broad and true emotional appeal, pictures that make and leave an impression.

That "something" doesn't come from the producers' bag of tricks, nor from astounding settings, nor the names of stars and authors. It comes first from the story and its capable visualization by the director and the cast.

IT is the very "something" that makes a story or a book widely read and long-lived. It is the "something" that "best sellers" and big magazine circulation. It is the "something" that makes millions of people today gamble on picture theatre tickets—and often go away disappointed.

How long will they continue to gamble?

We are overdoing the objective side of pictures. In an effort to make them popular we crowd them with stupendous effects, with "thrills," close-ups, striking photography, big scenes—forgetting that the whole is an undigestible bulk with no lasting nourishment in it.

Such pictures cost fortunes; yet I have known a picture with but a man, a woman and a dog in the cast which in its reissues—it is still booking—will have been viewed by fifty times as many people.

It had "something" in it.

VOL. XIII April 22, 1916. No. 16

The High Cost of Fresh Air

THE improperly ventilated motion picture theatre is once more receiving its merited share of attention from the health experts of various cities, notably New York and Detroit.

Some of the figures and conditions specified, particularly in New York City, are astonishing. Out of a total of 518 theatres in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx, 334 were found to be so poorly ventilated as to be "a menace to public health," in the words of the official report.

Only seventy-seven houses in the three boroughs were found to be ventilated properly.

A PECULIAR result of the investigation was the discovery by the Board of Health's inspectors that almost all the theatres had the facilities with which to comply with the law, but did not operate them on account of the cost!

Fresh air was too expensive, these exhibitors (if they must be called such for purposes of identification) reasoned.

Fresh air meant cold air, and cold air meant that it had to be heated, which in turn meant good money spent for coal. That would never do.

So instead they shut off their ventilating fans, kept entrances and exits tightly closed, and used disinfectants to disguise the odor of the stale air within.

TO tell an exhibitor of this type that such unsanitary practices are really "bad business" is only to bewilder him. He does not know what you mean, because all his business methods are bad.

No exhibitor who has not the common decency to present his patrons with a clean, fresh, airy house has any right to be identified with this business.

Not only is he a virtual enemy of his patrons, but he is a traitor to the trade, because he causes it to be brought into disrepute with the better elements of the community by such uncleanliness.

DR. DE KLEINE, the head of the anti-tuberculosis movement in Michigan, though not specifically so severe upon the motion picture theatres that have come under his observation, declares, nevertheless, that many of them are unsafe for persons of weak constitution. "Their patrons are starved for air," is the way he puts the case.

In justice to the Michigan exhibitor, Dr. De Kleine asserts that the motion picture theatres of that state are constantly improving their ventilating facilities, but he points out that much remains to be done in this regard.

The implication is—and it is a just one—that too much cannot be done.

IT is the duty of every exhibitor to see to it that no patron of his, through any act or omission of the management, takes harm in any way from an evening spent at his theatre.

The primary safeguards against bodily injury, it need hardly be said, are fire prevention and ventilation. These are as important as a clean, broad, artistic program.

No self-respecting exhibitor would knowingly offer his audience an inferior or an immoral picture. He should be just as solicitous of the air they breathe as he is of the pictures they see.

One is quite as important as the other in the ultimate success of his house.

A Regrettable Misunderstanding

THE evidences this week are that we are to have two trade shows. From every one's standpoint—exhibitor, producer, dealer, manufacturer, distributor, public, this is exceedingly regrettable. Everything is against the unfortunate situation; nothing at all is in its favor. The very principle for which the Board of Trade was organized, the very fundamental of its existence,—namely unity of organization of all branches of the industry is, for the moment at least, set at naught. It is a sad showing for the fifth industry to make to the public and still more so to its own component parts.

THE situation is purely the result of misunderstandings—which should not exist, which ought to be dispelled with little trouble. But one single possible good can result from the present obstinate division and that is a clearer future understanding and a closer future co-operation.

IN the meantime it is to be hoped that the exhibitors of the country will not take the situation at all overseriously and that every man will exercise his own good sense, his loyalty to his calling and to the industry at large and will accept the statement made until he knows his facts.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS knows pretty clearly all elements involved and knowing these believes as ever and, equally in the greater possibilities of the Exhibitor's League and of the Board of Trade and in their close affiliation and perfect harmony at no late date.

Space for Exposition Snapped Up by Companies

Manufacturing Concerns and Film Producers Come Forward in a Body and Contract for Large Booths—Orders Sent in from All Over the Country—Madison Square Garden Will Be Decorated Inside and Out in a Color Scheme of Green, White and Gold—Daily Film Paper Will Supply 200,000 Visitors with News

FILM producers and large manufacturing companies in the accessory field have come forward in a body to contract for space at the First National Motion Picture Exposition, under the direction of the Motion Picture Board of Trade at Madison Square Garden, May 6-14, inclusive. Approximately 20,000 square feet have already been signed for.

These orders have come from all over the country and include the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles and the Board of Trade of St. Petersburg, Fla.

The Mutual Film Company has taken 1,500 square feet and the Paramount Pictures Corporation, with the Famous Players, Jesse L. Lasky Pictures Company, Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and the Pallas Pictures, has taken a like amount.

Others who have contracted for exhibiting space at the Garden are: Eastman Kodak Company, 400 square feet; Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 520 square feet; Bluebird Films, 500 square feet; Vitagraph Company of America, 500 square feet; Fox Film Corporation, 500 square feet; International Film Service, 500 square feet; Nicholas Power Company, 500 square feet; J. H. Hallberg, 500 square feet; Cooper Hewitt Comapny, 100 square feet; Bell and Howell, 140 square feet; Novelty Slide Company, 100 square feet; Typhoon Fan Company, 100 square feet: Motion Picture Apparatus Company, 100 square feet; Searchlight Library, 140 square feet; Motion Picture Directory Company, 200 square feet; Morning Telegraph, 336 square feet; MOTION PICTURE NEWS, 336 square feet; Motion Picture World, 140 square feet; Motion Picture Magazine, 100 square feet; Motography, 140 square feet; National Cash Register Company, 270 square feet; Estey Organ Company, 800 square feet; Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, 640 square feet; St. Petersburg (Fla.) Board of Trade, 300 square feet.

Binder in Active Charge

The active management of the exposition is in the hands of J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. Harry Cochrane, general manager of the Madison Square Garden, is associated with Mr. Binder, which fact guarantees the affair will have the full facilities of the best known show place in the world.

An extensive program has been arranged by the officers and members of the Board with the object of making the exposition a profitable and instructive one and also highly entertaining.

S. L. Rothapfel, well known for his original ideas in decorations and for his orchestration arrangements for motion picture playhouses, will be in control of the artistic work for the Garden show.

The principal colors which will gladden the eyes of the 200,000 or so visitors present during the eight days of the exposition will be green, white and gold. These colors, it is expected will unite to become the national and international banner of the motion picture industry for all time. These colors in streamers and pennants will be hung both inside and outside the Garden.

The ceiling of the building will be covered with the beautiful Tiffany glass and the walls done in harmonious colors. The show booths are placed around the sides and each exibitor has promised to do his best in the way of decorating.

Heretofore one of the great troubles to be encountered in holding an exposition at Madison Square Garden is the lighting system. Naturally some of the exibits will be of small articles and the visitor will want to see them closely. To meet this difficulty an arrangement has been entered into with the Cooper Hewitt Company for them to supply the lights. These lights were used for the Willard-Moran fight and the interior of the Garden was as bright as a sunny day.

A large stage with a depth of 100 feet will be constructed at the Fourth avenue end of the building. At the rear of this will be built the largest motion picture screen in the world. In front there will be 2,000 comfortable opera chairs. Here when one tires of the exhibits and other attractions they may find a motion picture show with the latest feature plays and comedies.

Producing Studio a Feature for Public

What will probably be the most enthralling entertainment feature of the exposition will take place on the large platform. A typical producing studio will be assembled and the general public will be shown the mysteries of the cameraizing of the picture play.

Stars drawn from many companies have offered their services and under the supervision of able directors of the first rank they will enact a scenario each day. Then as soon as possible the pictures will be placed on the screen without editing or making over. This will be the first time in the history of the industry that the layman has been invited to see the action of the players before the camera.

Dancing is to be another big attraction. It is well known that no affair of any magnitude is successful nowadays without it, so with that point in mind the management will allot the center of the Garden for that purpose. Three thousand couples will be able to dance at the same time. Dancing will be from opening until closing.

Each day of the exposition will have a designated name, such as Bankers' Day, Exhibitors' Day, Board of Trade Day, Fire Insurance Day, Distributors' Day, Projection Day, and Fashion Day. Each will have its own set of features. For instance on Bankers' Day leading members of the American Bankers' Association will deliver addresses on the relation of capital to the industry, while on Fire Insurance Day the exhibitor will be spoken to on fire, its cause and prevention.

Fashion Day means that all the well known gown, hat and shoe shops will have their mannikins in attendance to show the latest fads of the day. This will be especially attractive, as New York has set the world's fashions in women's wear for the last year.

A reception committee composed of motion picture actors and actresses prominent to the public will be present at the Garden each day.

Array of Screen Favorites

This committee will include practically every screen favorite, and while many important additions are to be made before the opening of the exposition, as now constituted the Vitagraph Company will be represented by Anita Stewart, Leah Baird, Naomi Childers, Jewell Hunt, Billy Billings, Rose Tapley, Dorothy Kelly, Arline Pretty, Anne Schaefer, Mary Anderson, Eulalie Jensen, Louise Beaudet, Betty Howe, Virginia Norden, Robert Edeson, Adele Degarde, Julia Swayne Gordon, Mary Maurice, Belle Bruce, Frank Daniels, Ralph Ince, Joseph Kilgour, William Shea, William Duncan, John T. Kelly, Anders Randolf, Charles Kent, Denton Vane, Evart Overton, L. Rogers, Lytton, Wally Van, Webster Campbell, Charles Wellesley, Antonio Moreno, Arthur Cozine, James Morrison, Van Dyke Brooke, Donald Hall, Robert Gaillord, Harry Northrup, Paul Scardon, Harry Morey, Ned Finley and William R. Dunn.

Pathé representatives, among others, will be Pearl White, Florence Reed, Jackie Saunders and Ruth Roland.

Geraldine Farrar, Blanche Sweet, Marie Doro, Mae Murray, Anita King, Violet Malone, Florence Dagamar, Fannie Ward, Cleo Ridgely, Marjorie Daw, Charlotte Walker, Camille Astor, Theodore Roberts, Wallace Reid; Victor Moore and Thomas Meighan are among the representatives of the Lasky Company.

From the Horsley and Cub Comedy Studios will be Margaret Gibson, Crane Wilbur, William Clifford and George Ovey.

Mary Pickford herself will head the delegation from the Famous Players with Hazel Dawn, Marguerite Clark, John Barrymore and Pauline Frederick.

The Mutual will have Charlie Chaplin, Louise Owen, Helen Rosson, F. Forest Taylor, Harry V. Meter, William Clifford, Brooklyn Keller, Nan Christy, Margaret Gibson, Winifred Greenwood, Dick La Reno, Vivian Rich, Anna Little, Frances Keyes, Walter Hiers, Gladys Dore, Riley Chamberlain, Helen Holmes and Iva Shepard.

A big galaxy of stars will represent the Universal, including Grace Cunard, Cleo Madison, Marie Walcamp, Helen Ware, Sarah Bernhardt, Mary Fuller, Ida Schnall, Violet Mersereau, Little Zoe Beck, Gretchen Lederer, Lewis Waller, Francis Ford, Hobart Bosworth, Master Antrim Short, Billie Ritchie, Richard Stanton, Stanley Walpole, Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Lena Baskette, Billie Rhodes, Rupert Julian, Myrtle Gonzalez, William C. From the Fox Film Corporation will come Theda Bara, Annette Kellerman, William Farnum, Virginia Pearson, Violet Horner, George Walsh, Stuart Holmes, Dorothy Bernard, Vivian Martin, Bertha Kalich, Doris Pawn.

Metro pictures will be represented by Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Martha Hedman, Edmund Breese, Valli Valli, Mme. Olga Petrova, William Davidson, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, William Nigh, Orrin Johnson, Adelaide Thurston, Howard Estabrook, Emily Stevens, Florence Reed, Albert Chevalier, Mary Miles Winter, Lionel Barrymore, Jane Grey, William Faversham, Marguerite Snow, Ann Murdock, Dorothy Donnelly, Gail Kane, Lois Meredith, Ethel Barrymore, Julius Steger, Grace Valentine and George LeGuere.

Morosco stars present will include Leonore Ulrich, Dustin Farnum, George Beban.

Daily Paper for Eight Days

A new daily newspaper will make its appearance for the eight days of the exposition's run.

It will be of standard size and will be composed of eight pages, each of which will be filled with motion picture news. The name will be the Motion Picture Daily Trade Show Bulletin.

Thomas A. Edison will write a signed editorial for the issue of May 7.

Cartoonists, headed by Hy Mayer and Winsor McCay, of national reputation, will have drawings on both humorous and serious subjects. The news department will be looked after by an editorial board composed of men who write about pictures and nothing else.

Fashion and society will not be forgotten, as a page will be devoted to the gowns of the day and the women who wear them.

The Motion Picture Daily Trade Show Bulletin will be sent broadcast throughout the country.

Arrow Film Corporation Elects Two Officers

John F. Shallenberger, Brother of W. E. Shallenberger, President Since Inception of the Company, Is Made Vice-President, and Warren H. Small, Secretary

AT THE semi-annual meeting of the directors of the Arrow Film Corporation, which releases through the Pathé exchanges, held last week, two new officers were elected to fill vacancies. John F. Schallenberger, of Chicago, a brother of W. E. Shallenberger—who has been the president of the Arrow company since its organization and is one of the big figures in the motion picture industry—was elected vice-president. Warren H. Small was elected secretary. Both Messrs. Shallenberger and Small became, ex officio, members of the board of directors.

John F. Shallenberger is one of the three brothers whose money financed the late Charles J. Hite in the acquisition of the Thanhouser Film Corporation. He is also financially interested, as is W. E. Shallenberger, in the Mutual, American, North American and other motion picture organizations. He never has been as active as W. E. Shallenbreger in the industry, but he intends to devote more of his time to the supervision of his already large holdings.

Warren H. Small is a member of the law firm of Prindle, Wright and Small, of 111 Broadway, New York. They are counsel to the DuPont Powder Company and other large manufacturing concerns. Mr. Small was for several years the legal representative of the Motion Picture Patents Company and had charge of the preparation of its organization and general business affairs from its inception. He also was attorney of the General Film Company during the presidency of Frank L. Dyer.

Owing to the growth of the Arrow Film Corporation new office space became necessary, and the directors voted to move the offices uptown. Accordingly, the Arrow Film Corporation now is quartered in a suite in the Times Building, where all the executive departments are grouped. At the same time, Albert S. LeVino, who was secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation from its organization and has been closely associated with W. E. Shallenberger for some time, was appointed assistant to the president.

President Shallenberger now divides his time between the Arrow studios in Yonkers and the New York office. He has taken personal charge of all Arrow productions, including "The Woman's Law," in which Florence Reed is starred and which recently was released through the Pathé exchanges, and the new "Who's Guilty?" series for Pathé.

At the directors' meeting it was determined to continue President Shallenberger's policy of original scenarios for Arrow productions, except in the rare cases where good picture material may be found in a novel or play. Edfrid A. Bingham, who is in charge of the Arrow scenario departments, co-operating with Mr. LeVino in the creation and arrangement of Arrow scripts.

The publicity and advertising departments were placed under the direct supervision of Mr. LeVino, who is charged also with the Arrow's editing of all its productions through the Pathé exchanges.

With the completion of the tenth "Who's Guilty?" chapter, the Arrow will resume its production of five-reel Gold Rooster features for Pathé. Mr. Shallenberger now has four completed scenarios ahead for these Arrow-Pathé features.

LAST "MUSTY SUFFER" RELEASE FROM KLEINE READY

The tenth and concluding reel of George Kleine's serial comedy featuring Harry Watson, Jr., entitled "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," will be released next week.

Atlanta Exposition Makes History in Filmland

Mayor Delivers Opening Address—Managers of Picture Theatres in the City Prominent Figures in Success of the Event—Beauty Contest Is Decided with Much Perplexity by Judges, So Many Pretty Women Among the Entrants—Banquet Held at Hotel Ansley with Billy Oldnow Toastmaster

Atlanta, Ga., April 8.

THE first motion picture trades exposition the south has ever had came to a close Saturday night, April 1, following a grand ball held in the auditorium, at which Louise Desverges Everett was selected as the winner of the Universal Beauty Contest. Mrs. Everett will leave shortly for New York, where she will be given a "try-out."

The ball on Saturday night was a fitting climax to the exposition, which was pronounced as being one of the most successful affairs ever held in Atlanta. From the opening of the exposition on Thursday afternoon, March 30, until its close everything moved with perfect harmony, and the film men returned to their homes proud of the fact that they are in the motion picture business. They declared that they would most certainly be on hand at the exposition of 1917.

Hazel Dawn, Irving Cummings and Director Frederick Thompson, of the Famous Players Company, who are now in Georgia for the purpose of taking a picture of the "moonshiners" in the northern part of the state, were in Atlanta during the time the exposition was in session and contributed much to the gayety and importance of the occasion.

Atlanta had been looking forward to the coming of the film men for many weeks and the day the exposition opened everything was in readiness to greet them. Fred Young, of Atlanta, secretary of the exposition, was largely responsible for its success.

Mayor Opens with an Address

Mayor James G. Woodward made the opening address on Thursday. He welcomed the film men most heartily, telling them Atlanta was indeed glad to have them in her midst and hoped they would return next year.

Thursday night the auditorium was beautifully decorated and great crowds poured in and out all the evening. The booths of the different exchanges were the cause of much favorable comment.

Those having booths were as follows: Motion Picture News, Motiograph, S. B. Blakely, representative; Minusa Cine Products, St. Louis; Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Walter Price, representative; Southern Theater Equipment Company, Atlanta, Dallas and New Orleans; Peerless Projectors, Atlanta Poster and Mounting Company, Pathé exchange; Bluebird photoplays, in charge of U. T. Koch; Automatic Player Piano Company, Baird Projectors, Mutual exchange, Lucas Theater Supply Company, World Film exchange, Universal exchange and United Progress Film Service.

The managers of the Atlanta picture theaters were prominent figures in the success of the exposition, proving themselves invaluable assistants to Mr. Young, the secretary.

The banquet given the visitors at the Hotel Ansley, Friday night, was one of the most enjoyable features of the exposition. Representatives of the picture business in as many as fifteen Southern cities were called upon to talk of film work.

Oldknow Is Toastmaster

In attendance at the banquet were many notables. Billy Oldknow, local film man, was the toastmaster, while R. M. Sivini, manager of the United Program Film service, was the principal laugh-getter of the evening.

Lillian Rubenstein, scenario-writer, whose lessons in scenario writing appear weekly in one of the local papers, and who came to Atlanta expressly for the purpose of attending the exposition, was a guest at the banquet.

She made an excellent little speech, in spite of the fact that she insisted she was no speech-maker.

Scores of pretty girls were entered in the Beauty Contest, and it was a matter of great difficulty to select the winner. On Saturday night—the closing night of the exposition—the Atlanta auditorium was jammed.

Out of the great number of contestants the judges selected Mrs. Louise Desverges Everett, wife of Clarence Elliott, of Atlanta. Mrs. Elliott is a brunette and is nineteen years old. She is from Bainbridge, Ga.

The committee of judges who selected Mrs. Everett have faith in her, and expect that some day she will blossom into one of filmland's stars.

"The success of this year's exposition will not begin to compare with that of 1917," said Fred Young when Saturday night's festivities came to a close. "Atlanta has long been recognized as the center of Southern film activities, and will continue to exert herself in the future.

"The Southern Motion Picture Trades Exposition has now become an institution in Atlanta and the South. It will be staged on a larger scale next year, and I only hope that I'm here to take an active hand in it.

"I want to see the day when it will no longer be the southern exposition, but the national exposition.

"The national convention of moving picture men can be brought to Atlanta as readily as to Chicago or New York, and I am one of those willing to do everything in my power to bring it here." L. K. STARR.

Thomas Persons Resigns from Selig Polyscope

General Manager of the Organization Is One of the Pioneers of the "Fifth Estate" and Knows All Details of Production—A. A. Davison Is His Successor

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, April 8.

THOMAS PERSONS, who has been connected with the Selig Polyscope Company since its organization, and prior to that time was associated with Col. W. H. Selig in various enterprises, has tendered his resignation as general manager of the Selig interests and studios in Los Angeles, which he has held for the past four years or more—since the death of Frank Boggs, who brought the first permanent Selig organization and founded the studio here.

The resignation was tendered more than a month ago, to become effective about the middle of March, but Mr. Persons remained with the Selig company until matters could be arranged here and a successor named. A. A. Davison, who has served the Selig company as auditor, has been sent to Los Angeles to succeed Mr. Persons.

Mr. Persons has not made a statement concerning his intentions, not even to his most intimate friends, but by all it is expected that he will remain in some way connected with the motion picture industry. He is one of the genuine pioneers of the Fifth Estate, and was with the first company that came to Los Angeles to make pictures. The first subject was "Carmen," which was filmed on a downtown roof at a cost of less than three hundred dollars. It was a few feet less than one reel.

Mr. Persons throughout his long career in fildom has mastered every department of photoplay-making, and is one of the very few men who can look after all details of production successfully.

Seelye, Sales Expert, Joins Pathe Company

Special Survey Will Be Made by Him of the Exchange and Exhibitor Fields with View to Putting into Effect Advanced Ideas of Distribution of Vice-President Berst

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of the Pathé Company, announces the engagement of C. R. Seelye as sales expert. Mr. Seelye will make a special survey of the exchange and exhibitor field, with a view to putting into effect, if possible, certain advanced ideas of distribution suggested by Mr. Berst.

Commenting on Pathé's acquisition of Mr. Seelye, Mr. Berst said: "We have engaged Mr. Seelye because Pathé wants that quality of talent that will mutually benefit the exhibitor and ourselves. Mr. Seelye is a scientist, a sales scientist, who has studied the situation from the logical standpoint of adequate revenue from legitimate source. He has plotted out the country much as a general plots out a battlefield.

"Mr. Seelye will visit our exchanges and make a careful study of conditions in the various territories. He will secure the cooperation of the local newspapers with our exhibitors, advise the branch managers of ideas that will increase box-office receipts and suggest such changes as will benefit the service."

Mr. Seelye first came into prominence in film circles when he introduced modern merchandising methods into the World Film Corporation. Later at the V-L-S-E, Inc., he applied his policies with successful results. Mr. Berst was general manager for the Selig Company when Mr. Seelye was with V-L-S-E.

"CIVILIZATION" WILL BE SHOWN IN LOS ANGELES APRIL 17

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, April 8.

Los Angeles theatre patrons are to see the Thomas H. Ince war spectacle "Civilization," weeks before it is shown in any other city, the date for the premier having been fixed for April 17 at the Majestic theatre, Los Angeles, the home of the Triangle program.

Preparations for this are now being made, the plans calling for several atmosphere-creating scenes which are being made under the direction of Dave Hartford, well known stage director now with Ince, and Robert Brunton, art expert of the Ince forces. The scenes shown prior to the picture will depict an atmosphere of peace, plenty and contentment in the imaginary country in which the scenes of the picture are laid, and following the picture will be an allegorical scene showing the angel of peace standing over the crushed body of the war god.

Music for the subject, which is being prepared by Victor L. Schertzinger, will be much longer than an ordinary opera, and contains about forty different melodies. An orchestra of thirty-two pieces will play the incidental music. There will be two performances daily, afternoon and evening.

SALLIE FISHER IS CAST FOR "LITTLE SHEPHERD OF BARGAIN ROW"

Sallie Fisher, Dillingham star, has been obtained by Essanay to play the big part in "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," a five-act visualization of Howard McKent Barnes' novel and drama.

With Miss Fisher in the piece are Richard C. Travers and John Junior, two stars known to picture followers the world over.

"The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row" would have been highly inconsistent a quarter of a century ago, but now it is literally a page out of today. There is not a situation in it that is not true to life in the business section of a great city, and the subject lends itself admirably to filming.

There are many opportunities in it for Miss Fisher to exercise her talent for light comedy.

SALLIE FISHER

"Who's Guilty?" Series Will Come From Pathe May 8

Titles Thus Far Selected for a Few of the Photo-Novels, in Every Case Complete in Themselves, Yet Based on the Major Theme in the General Characterization of the Group of Picture Units, Are "The Stroke of the Scalpel," "Sowing the Wind," "The Tight Rein" and "The Tangled Web"

ON May 8 the Pathe Exchange will release throughout the country the first of the fourteen two-reel photo-novels which comprise Pathe's newest series, "Who's Guilty?" These photo-novels are, in every case, complete in themselves. They have no plot connection with each other, yet all are based on the one major theme of "Who's Guilty?"

"Who's Guilty?" series is produced by the Arrow Film Corporation for Pathe. Under the personal guidance of W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Company, no item of plot, acting, direction, setting or other detail of successful motion picture production has been overlooked, it is said.

Co-starred in the "Who's Guilty?" series are Anna Q. Nilsson and Tom Moore, both of whom have long been favorites of American motion picture patrons. Four years ago Miss Nilsson, seen until then only in one and two-reel pictures, leaped into fame by her performance in "Shenandoah." Since then she has been starred in a great number of Kalem and Equitable features and proved one of the greatest drawing-cards of the General and World programs. Mr. Moore comes of the talented Moore trio; he is a brother of Owen Moore, Mary Pickford's husband, and of Matt Moore, a Universal star.

Fourteen Gowns for Miss Nilsson

All of Miss Nilsson's gowns in the "Who's Guilty?" series were made especially for her by Hickson, the Fifth avenue modiste. The striking blonde beauty that is one of Miss Nilsson's chiefest charms is admirably set off by the queenly sweep of the frocks that Hickson has furnished for her. There seldom are fewer than four Hickson gowns to each "Who's Guilty?" photo-novel, but in one Miss Nilsson is seen in fourteen of the smartest costumes that Hickson could turn out.

Staging and directing these fourteen photo-novels are Howell Hansel and Lawrence B. McGill. Mr. Hansel made a name for himself as the director of "The Million Dollar Mystery," "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," and a number of other Thanhouser photo-plays. For several years he was the presiding genius over the Castle Square Stock Company in Boston. Later he became a drawing-card in several David Belasco productions, wherein he appeared with Blanche Bates.

Lawrence B. McGill is one of the small number of directors who made good pictures in the early days of the screen play and still is a highly successful producer. Some of his many features are "Pierre of the Plains," "Arizona" and "The Greyhound," made for All-Star; "The Sealed Valley" for Metro and "How Molly Made Good." His latest feature success is "The Woman's Law," the Pathe-Arrow feature in which Florence Reed is starred and which has proved to be one of the real sensations of the year.

One of the few great women writers of our day is turning each "Who's Guilty?" photo-novel into a fiction story that will appear in a large number of newspapers throughout the country simultaneously with the release of each two-reel screen play.

Mrs. Woodrow Supplied Six Plots

She is Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, a relative of President Wilson and a magazine writer of great note. But Mrs. Woodrow has not confined herself merely to fictionizing the "Who's Guilty?" plays. She has supplied six of the plots herself, and those who have read her brilliant stories in the Saturday Evening Post, the Cosmopolitan, McClure's, the American Magazine, Scribner's and a host of others, will realize instantly the rich literary and dramatic flavor of her photoplays.

The actual scenarios of the "Who's Guilty?" series have been written in their entirety, or else re-edited by E. A. Bingham, long the head of the Metro scenario department, and for many years editor of the Paris edition of the New York Herald. Mr. Bingham is the author of several dramatic and literary successes. His newest book is "The Heart of Thunder Mountain." Collaborating with Mr. Bingham on the "Who's Guilty?" scenarios is Albert S. LeVino, of the Arrow Company, who dramatized "The Woman's Law."

Distribution of the "Who's Guilty?" series is under the direct supervision of George A. Smith, serial director of Pathe Exchange, Incorporated.

He has had charge of the newspaper arrangements for the appearance of the "Who's Guilty?" series, which will be published simultaneously in the Detroit Times, Providence Tribune, Buffalo Evening News, Indianapolis Star, Altoona Tribune, Philadelphia North American, Pittsburgh Press, New York Evening World, Cincinnati Times-Star, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Dallas News, Los Angeles Record, San Francisco Call, Atlanta Journal, Chicago Herald, New Orleans Item, St. Louis Times, Omaha World-Herald, Salt Lake Tribune and Kansas City Star.

The titles thus far selected for some of the photo-novels of the "Who's Guilty?" series are: "The Stroke of the Scalpel," "Sowing the Wind," "The Tight Rein," "The Tangled Web," "The Second Offense," "The Silent Shame," "The Moral Coward" and "Sold Out." The exact order in which they will appear has not yet been determined.

Prior to the release of the first of the "Who's Guilty?" series the Arrow Film Corporation will have turned over to Pathe eight completed two-reel plays.

POPPE RESIGNS FROM CENTAUR COMPANY

Harry Poppe has resigned as press agent of David Horsley's Centaur Feature Company. Mr. Poppe has made no announcement of his future plans. He was connected with the Centaur company for nearly a year, during which time he managed the publicity department of the company.

Mr. Poppe has been in the picture business for many years. Serving in an editorial position on the Billboard he was one of the first reviewers and newsgatherers the business has seen. A little over a year ago, Mr. Poppe, in association with Edward Morrison, organized the Morrison and Poppe Film Report Service.

Shortly after the inauguration of this company, Mr. Poppe left to join the Centaur company.

TWO VIEWS OF THE ORIENTAL CITY WHICH WILLIAM FOX CONSTRUCTED IN JAMAICA FOR THE KELLERMANN FILM, PRODUCTION OF WHICH HAS JUST BEEN COMPLETED BY DIRECTOR-GENERAL HERBERT BRENON

E. AND R. JUNGLE'S NAPOLEON IS NOT IN VAUDEVILLE; HE WORKS ONLY IN PICTURES

Los Angeles, April 8.

Messrs. Edward and Rounan, owners of the E. & R. Jungle Film Company, have sent out announcements to all exchanges handling their animal comedies, denying that their chimpanzee Napoleon is now in vaudeville with the elephant Little Hip, as many have been led to believe.

A few years ago Napoleon was featured over several of the big time vaudeville circuits in an act with an elephant of this name, and later went on a trip through Australia.

It was while on this trip that Hip died, and since that time the chimpanzee has been appearing in pictures only. The cause of this announcement by the E. & R. people is that an act entitled "Napoleon the Great and Little Hip" is appearing in vaudeville. The management of the act represented this to be the original team, causing the film producing company to receive scores of inquiries regarding the same.

Sometimes Forty a Day Wounded in Brenon Fights

Army of the Cross and Army of the Crescent, Numbering 10,000 Natives, Battle Realistically in Jamaica for Kellermann Picture

TEN thousand, four hundred and forty-seven persons represent the largest number employed on any one day in the making of the William Fox Annette Kellermann picture in Jamaica. This great army does not represent all who were used in the picture, but is the high peak of any one day. Throughout the making of the picture 7,600 persons was the average number employed.

In addition to the direction of the picture, Director General Herbert Brenon had the additional task of harmonizing the idiosyncrasies of practically every race on the globe. Of course the majority of the people used were whites, Hindus, Jamaicans and maroons, who, although all living on the island, do not fraternize to any great extent.

The Hindu insisted upon the strictest observance of caste; his drinking water and cup must not be contaminated; his food had to be handled differently, and finally he would ride only in boats provided for his especial use. The Jamaican is a happy-go-lucky soul, primitive and emotional, but possessing a wonderful sense of humer and mimicry.

The maroon is a person apart from all others. He is the descendant of runaway slaves who inhabit the almost inaccessible interior of the island. For years these negroes were most formidable opponents of the early colonists and for years sustained a brave resistance against any encroachment by the whites.

So strong were they that to this day they have privileges wrested from the British Government as a condition to their observance of the white man's law. The British Government succeeded in subduing them only by the importation of thousands of the fiercest bloodhounds from the Island of Cuba by which the individual maroon was tracked down and often horribly mutilated before the dogs could be caught and leashed.

This combination of races was used largely in the battle scenes in this great picture. These battle scenes were usually preceded by a speech by Director Brenon, in which the warriors were told that the picture when completed would be shown all over the world, and that it depended upon them whether or not the beauties of Jamaica should become known throughout the universe.

The two armies were known respectively as the Army of the Cross and the Army of the Crescent. The soldiers themselves called themselves "Kellermann Man" or "Shay Man," depending upon which was their leader. Exceptional tact was necessary in the handling of the two armies, as too marked praise for one inevitably resulted in a determination by the other to "even up scores" in the next battle.

Casualties were not as great as might be expected with 10,000 natives fighting like furies with battle axes, spears, swords and other weapons. The average number per day was twenty, but during the first two days of the battle scenes the wounded numbered forty on the first day and twenty-seven on the second day. The reduction in injuries after the first two days is attributed to the proficiency gained in the use of the shield.

Cohen Joins Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc.

He Believes That the Clara Kimball Young Features and His Chief's Distribution Plans Offer Opportunities for Wide Outlet for His Abilities

BEN S. COHEN, east central district manager of the World Film Corporation, resigned from that post this week to join the forces of the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., which will distribute the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation features and those of other noted stars. Mr. Cohen's resignation took effect immediately and he has already launched his preliminary sales campaign.

From coast to coast Mr. Cohen is known personally to every exhibitor of prominence. He entered the film industry in Omaha, Neb., where he had been practising law. Within a few months he became the Pacific Coast district manager of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation. After a year with that company he accepted an offer from the World Film Corporation to take charge of its East Central District. His duties with the Thanhouser and World Film corporations brought him in close touch with all the big exhibitors of the west, an acquaintance that was extended to the Atlantic states when he came east to take charge of the New York World Film Exchange for several months.

In speaking of his resignation from the World and the prospects of the new Selznick organizations, Mr. Cohen said:

"I left the World Film because I am absolutely convinced that Mr. Selznick has in the Clara Kimball Young features and his new ideas of distribution the greatest proposition in the film business.

"Aside from my enthusiasm for the new company, I should like my many friends in the business to know that in severing my connection with World Film and rejoining Mr. Selznick, I was also guided by a spirit of loyalty to the man to whom I owed my chance to make good for World Film."

"Secret of the Submarine" a Patriotic Picture

Accident to U. S. Undersea Craft in Honolulu Harbor Suggested Serial to American Film Company—Need for Some Inventive Genius of the Country to Perfect Apparatus Designed to Give Unfailing Supply of Fresh Air to Crews Beneath the Surface Is Theme of Hutchinson Subject

"THE Secret of the Submarine," a chaptered photoplay produced by the American Film Company, will be released as a Mutual special feature on May 8. The story is woven around the life of a young girl, whose father is the inventor of an apparatus enabling sub-sea craft to reach a great depth without peril to the crews. The specifications of this invention are sought by foreign powers as well as the American government. The picture makes possible the direct introduction of the question of national defense in a manner at once logical and thrilling.

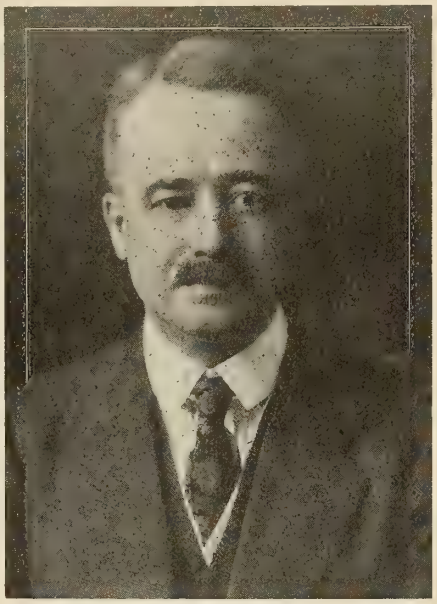
The fact that the United States are in search for the specifications lends a patriotic novelty to the drama of the story. The dramatic suspense is well sustained from the beginning, being carried through adventure after adventure, to a big climax at the close of each chapter.

Thomas Chatterton as Lieut. Hope, U. S. N., and Juanita Hansen as Cleo Burke, modern young Americans, awaken immediate interest in the love affairs of the chief characters. Mr. Chatterton is a virile type of hero and Miss Hansen the possessor of captivating winsomeness.

The "heavy" roles have been given to Lamar Johnstone, Hykda Hollis and William Tedmarsh, whose characterization of Quabba in "The Diamond From the Sky" is remembered.

George Clancy as "Hook" Barnacle, an old salt, who has gained his sobriquet because of a hook in place of nis right hand, is afforded an opportunity for character work, as is George Webb in his role of Mahlin.

Responsibility on Producers



"Indisputable evidence of the progress of the motion picture industry is seen in the constant demand by theatre patrons for something new," said President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American, discussing the new serial. "The responsibility to meet this demand is naturally upon the producer.

"In the making of pictures, and particularly the chaptered pictures, or serials, as they are commonly called, this adherence to the popular demand must be absolute.

"There must be selected some big, dominant theme capable of lending itself to the spirit of adventure and romance in a manner that commands belief, and which finds answering note in the human heart, for the present day motion picture is not for the eye alone. It is often easier to find such a theme than to picturize it.

"When I undertake for my companies the production of a so-called serial photoplay I ask myself this question: 'What are people talking about and in what are they interested?'

"The answer can almost be picked out of the air. Surely the daily press carries the answer in black and white. That which is news in the press is news in the film, so I do not feel I am stretching my imagination greatly when I compare the newspaper editor to a picture producer or perhaps it should be the other way about since newspapers were here first.

S. S. HUTCHINSON

News Served Quick, Off the Bat

"The editor must enable his readers to learn the latest news about the latest happenings. That is the reason people buy the newspapers. It is an up-to-the-minute business and the progressive producer must be actuated by the same motives as the editor. He must be governed by the same mental mechanics and be guided by the same viewpoint of the public taste.

"It seems only yesterday that the daily press carried accounts of the loss of a United States submarine in Honolulu harbor with its entire crew of gallant men. The records show 'something went wrong with the batteries and the crew died from bad air.'

"Why bad air?

"Editorials in the press of the country asked this question daily, and it will remain unanswered until a positive safeguard comes from the realms of science.

"Now here is where the psychology of picture production comes in. A photoplay built upon a theme in which the entire nation is interested must retain the pent-up interest. The thought struck me as a producer just as the first report of the disaster must have startled the news instinct of the country's editors.

"I immediately issued instructions to the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc., to prepare to produce a chaptered photoplay to be called 'The Secret of the Submarine.'

"A photoplay with such a storied basis must naturally carry the thought of preparedness; also a psychological subject. Thus we have a theme of genuine national interest, with opportunity for educational propaganda that might result in the performance of a national service.

"I recalled this statement, credited to Thomas A. Edison, chairman of the national defense board:

"'To my mind there is no reason why an under-sea boat should not be supplied with a fish-gill-like apparatus, so that it can draw its supply of air directly from the water. Thus the lives of the crew will not be dependent upon the compressed air supply or on the ability of the boat to reach the surface. When this invention is perfected submarine navigation will be perfectly safe and secretive.'

"Could I portray in 'The Secret of the Submarine' sufficient dread of 'the waters under the sea' and the sacrifices written into their exploration to interest men of science, to urge them on in the search for a safeguard against the 'bad air' peril?

"If the picture arouses the latent genius of but one man I will feel I could write down an entry in the book of deeds well done.

"Of one thing I am certain, 'The Secret of the Submarine' will tell the people of this nation of the unmentioned heroism displayed by un-named men, that a bulwark of defense may ever be raised along our miles of sea coast.

"And these deeds will be told, not in a manner inspiring a dread of things, but woven into the life story of a beautiful girl, replete with all the thrills that might logically be expected in her battle against constant and unscrupulous enemies.

"The production well on its way I looked about for an author qualified to write a novelization for the newspapers which will publish the story.

"I had met E. Alexander Powell, F.R.G.S., the famous war correspondent, and much to my surprise learned he is in this country recuperating from his editorial activities 'somewhere in France.' I explained to him what I intended to do, and he became enthusiastic. We drew up the contract which gives to the film world one of the foremost writers of fact of the present day.

"In the production of 'The Secret of the Submarine,' which will be in fifteen chapters of two reels each, we will be accorded every opportunity to give to our scenes the acme of realism through the co-operation of the navy department, permission having been granted us to use both men and boats at the naval base of San Diego."

BATTERY OF CAMERA EYES TO SEE THAT ESSANAY PICTURES ARE ALL RIGHT

To insure the best photography possible Essanay has more than one camera working on all feature photoplays. The best negative of the scene is selected. It is only on the smaller scenes that one camera alone is used. On the larger two machines are trained on the set and for the massive spectacles now possible in Essanay's great studio three cameras are frequently used.

RIALTO, NEW YORK, OPENS ON APRIL 21

The new Rialto theatre, under construction at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, will not have its premier April 15 as scheduled. It will be impossible to complete the structure in time—hence the opening has been deferred until the following Friday, April 21, which will permit of six additional days of preparation.

According to Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel, this is just about the period lost through the activities of Oscar Hammerstein, which represents the direct loss sustained by the Rialto Theatre Company through the interference that led to court proceedings last Wednesday.

The opening performance will be an invitation affair, with attendance limited to 2,000 guests. Many of the latter, big factors in the moving picture world, are expected to come from remote distances to attend the dedication of what is expected to prove the greatest, as well as the most modern, theatre devoted to that form of entertainment.

Few details have been disclosed concerning the theatre or its policies. A significant announcement has been made by Managing Director Rothapfel in which he declares that the Rialto theatre will be absolutely free from the control or domination of any motion picture producing institutions.

EDISON READY TO RELEASE AGAIN ON GENERAL PROGRAM

The General Film Company announces that beginning April 25, Edison will again start releasing through the Regular Service of the General Film Company.

Edison, confirming this, says:

"The elapsed time since we discontinued releasing through the General Film Company has given us a long-hoped-for opportunity to 'get our breath,' so to speak, to make certain necessary changes in our producing organization; to secure a new and better line of stories; to improve our mechanical facilities—in short, to 'clean house' and prepare for a fresh start. Of the results of our period of apparent idleness we are justifiably proud."

Arthur Spiegel, Equitable Head, Dies in New York

Deceased Was Only Thirty-One and Had Become Known as an Executive of Rare Ability—Genius for Organization Made Him Power in Industry

ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL, president of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and general manager of the World Film Corporation, died Friday morning, April 7, in his apartments at the Hotel Plaza, New York. His wife and two children and older brother, Sidney M. Spiegel, were at the bedside. From a slight cold Mr. Spiegel contracted pneumonia, and after a courageous battle against the disease passed away at five o'clock. His office at the film organization has been assumed by William A. Brady.

THE LATE ARTHUR H. SPIEGEL

Mr. Spiegel, although but a few days over thirty-one years of age, was one of the country's great business men. A few years ago in the back room of his father's furniture store at 126 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, he began selling furniture and housefurnishings by mail order.

He conceived the advantage of selling by mail order and allowing for payment on the period plan. His success is best seen in immense plants of the Spiegel May Stern Company, Martha Lane Adams Company, the Clement Company and American Ladies' Tailoring Company, located at 1061 West Thirty-fifth street, Chicago, where the various enterprises are located. The plants occupy six city blocks and employ permanently three thousand people.

His genius for organization and his grasp on the immensities of great businesses established him as a commercial figure in the western metropolis and his grasp upon the new industry—motion pictures—was being recognized in the industry.

The merchandising power of the Spiegel enterprises can be understood when it is known that they have over two million customers a year on their books.

The burial of Mr. Spiegel will take place in Chicago.

BEAL TO WORK ON 12 REELER BY TARKINGTON AND ADE FOR SELIG

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, April 8.

Director Frank Beal, who has been producing at the Selig Los Angeles studios for the past year or more, has been called to Chicago by Colonel W. N. Selig, and will in all probability have charge of the production of a ten or twelve reel subject, story for which is now being prepared by Booth Tarkington and George Ade, working in collaboration.

This, it is understood, is to be one of the big coming offerings of the Selig company, and it is going to great expense in the preparation for filming the story. Most of the scenes will be made at the Chicago studios of the Selig company, while the exteriors will be filmed in Canada and other places which give the desired atmosphere to the production.

Mr. Beal has produced several of Selig's greatest successes released on the V-L-S-E program, and is considered a most competent producer.

Babyland Is Cleveland Concern Launched for Picturization of Tales Found in the Tomes of Messrs. Anderson, Grimm and That Fabling Gent, Aesop

Cleveland, O., April 8.

THE Babyland Film Company is the latest motion picture company to get started in Cleveland. The new enterprise, which owes its inception to the remarkable success of children's performances in and around Cleveland, is financed by a number of Cleveland men interested in motion picture development.

Preliminary announcements state that 500 Cleveland children will be used in making real fairy tales suitable for children's performances, and that a studio will be ready for operation about May 3. Either R. H. Burnside, of the New York Hippodrome, or L. D. Mitchell will direct the dramatic work, and M. F. Trostler, a well-known Cleveland dancing master, will design and direct the ballets and also supervise the training of the children for the dances.

The idea of the Babyland Film Company is to erect a miniature fairyland country and to people it with the familiar characters of the tales of Anderson, Grimm and Aesop.

JAMESON IN CHARGE OF FAMOUS PLAYERS IN INDIANAPOLIS

J. D. Jameson, formerly manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburgh exchange, has become manager of the Indianapolis office of that company.

Mr. Jameson, before becoming manager of the Pittsburgh office was manager of one of the western offices of the company.

He succeeds P. S. Allison, who probably will become a roadman, out of the Indianapolis office.

BOOKINGS OF AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT MADE DIRECT WITH NEW YORK OFFICE

The American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., announces that all bookings and leasing of state rights in connection with "The Battles of a Nation" are now being handled direct through its office, 220 West Forty-second street, New York.

Indications of the popularity of "The Battles of a Nation" as a war feature are evident in the reports from different parts of the country where the feature has been shown.

"The Best We Can Make" Is Brady Picture Slogan

In First Interview Granted by Him on Subject of Motion Pictures, William A. Brady, Noted Theatrical Manager, Who Has Just Taken Charge of Dramatic Production End of World Film Corporation, Plans to Bring Out Stage and Screen Plays Simultaneously

IN the first interview he has ever granted on the subject of motion pictures, William A. Brady, noted theatrical manager, this week told MOTION PICTURE NEWS of his attitude toward pictures, of the outlook for the industry, and of his idea of the future of the picture itself. Mr. Brady has just taken charge of the dramatic production end of the World Film Corporation's activities, and will devote his personal attention to the selection of plays, and the casts who are to present them.

"The slogan of this company is to be: 'No bad pictures,'" said Mr. Brady. "I do not mean that everything we produce will be a great picture, but we are now in a position to guarantee the exhibitor and the public absolutely that we will never put out a bad picture. We are going to select our photoplays with the same care that spoken plays are selected, and whatever I have learned in my thirty years' experience along this line will be brought to bear to this end.

"We will conduct no freakish campaign for the exploitation of any particular star; we will have a staff of reliable, sure-fire artists, and will screen our subjects with them alone; we will carefully avoid all 'smutty' and sensational plays; we will try to lead the way, if possible, to better things on the screen.

"The success of 'The Birth of a Nation' should convince every producer that the public wants and will support the better class of screen offerings. Its success is due to the fact that it is built upon the greatest dramatic moment in the history of the United States, and I believe there are many subjects in United States history which can be used to draw the public away from the eternal triangle, and away from restaurants and seductions, and all that.

No Conflict with Censors

"It will be our policy to avoid all conflict with the censors. The manufacturers can do away with censorship entirely, and end the eternal fight, if they will simply get together, possibly organize their own board, and make censorship unnecessary. When we find anyone among us who endangers the whole industry by truckling to dirt and 'smut' the rest of us should go to him and show him just what he is doing."

Mr. Brady outlined to MOTION PICTURE NEWS his scheme for co-operating with the theatre, and his plans for using the film to supplement and work hand in hand with the productions of the spoken stage. He announced that he has completed arrangements for embarking on a program of film versions of the great Broadway successes, within the year. This plan also contemplates distribution over the entire country.

"The greatest field for the motion picture in the future is to be found in the picture man and the theatrical producer to work hand in hand, and not attempt to fight each other," said Mr. Brady. As Mr. Brady himself has long been one of the most prominent and successful theatrical producers in the world, often suspected of looking with an unfriendly eye on the growth of the picture, this statement from him is regarded as of unusual significance.

WILLIAM A. BRADY

"The point is just this," he continued. "Only about six of the larger cities of the country can see the Broadway successes with their original casts. The big stars simply refuse to visit the smaller places. Consequently the play gets to those places with an inferior company, and maybe a year later, when the public will not have it. They have become interested in the newer productions which they read of, and will not go to see the success of last season.

Screen Version and Play Together

"Now, if these plays are filmed the moment they become established successes, with the original stars, and immediately sent out, to be exhibited all over the country while the play is still running, what an advantage it will be to all concerned. We can say to the public: 'In this form you can see the latest success, with its original cast—and this is the only way you can see it.' To the exhibitor we can point out the immense advertising value to be derived from the fact that the play is at the very moment drawing great crowds on Broadway.

"To take one case as an example: If Leo Deitrichstein in 'The Great Lover' had been filmed early in January, it would have visited every city, village and hamlet in the country by this time, and would have had the weight of the play's long Broadway run as an advertising factor.

"At this stage of the picture business a man must have a good sense of the dramatic, and of drama generally; I think I have this sense, and I think I have demonstrated it. My energies will be directed along that line in pictures.

"I think the motion picture producers have about eaten up all the dramatic situations that anyone can conceive. Our chief trouble is that we have arrived at a point where so many situations have been eliminated that things have fallen into a rut, and we must have new ideas and new situations.

"Like everything theatrical, the public taste in pictures is apt to take a sudden shift at any moment. Personally I believe the turn now is going to be toward even longer and more pretentious pictures than the present five-reeler.

"A great many of the stage stars have failed on the screen, while others have made good in a remarkable fashion. But the public has been educated up to the big names and demands them; consequently if the producer attempts to go back to the short pictures, with comparatively unknown people, he will find that the public will have none of them.

Screen Stars Versus Stage Stars

"Some of the screen stars can never be supplanted by the stars from the spoken drama. There are a number of these theatrical celebrities however, who are not only holding their own, but are undermining the popularity of the regular screen star; Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clarke, Alice Brady, Robert Warwick and several others are certainly among these.

"I trust nothing I have said will be taken as spoken in a spirit of egotism. I am here as a schoolboy, willing to learn what I can. I am bringing the results of long experience in the theatrical field, but I have everything to learn regarding this end of it. If I knew as much about pictures as D. W. Griffith and one or two others do I might have some reason to talk about myself. I have no intention of 'revolutionizing' any business, and don't imagine I could do it if I wanted to."

BERT ENNIS TAKES OVER MANAGER'S SCREEN REPORTS

Well known as former publicity manager and sales representative for Keystone, Eclair Film Company, Inc., Eastern Film Corporation, of Providence, R. I., and with six years' experience in all branches of the film industry, Bert Ennis is now established for himself.

He has purchased the business of Manager's Screen Reports from E. V. Morrison.

Under his personal direction the Bert Ennis Publicity Bureau, with offices in the Times Building, has the exclusive representation of several photoplay and legitimate artists.

GILL REPORTS HEAVY "MUTT AND JEFF" BOOKINGS

Special to Motion Picture News.

Kansas City, Mo., April 8.

H. G. Gill, of the Associated Film Service, reports that the advance inquiries of the Bud Fisher "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons is far ahead of any similar set, and he believes that it will be a record-breaker in all ways. He already has contracts dating into June, and is confident of getting more.

The announcement of the change from 300 feet to 500 feet has been of help in increasing the demand. A new feature that Mr. Gill has adopted is that of using five- and six-reel features in his service, instead of the shorter runs, which he has heretofore handled. He reports business in his office as very fine.

Tip-Toe Expectancy in Mill City Over Exposition

Minneapolis Citizens in Other Lines Enter Into Carnival Spirit with Exhibitors and Begin Boosting for the Event, Set for First Week in May

Minneapolis, April 8.

NOT since the days of the old expositions and carnivals in Minneapolis has there been such interest shown over the Northwest in a celebration as there is this year in the motion picture convention and exposition which will be held in the National Guard armory in the Mill City the first week in May.

Not only are the twenty-four big film exchanges in the Twin Cities and the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association boosting the event, but the railroads even have entered into the spirit of the thing and are advertising it in their depots and through their agents in the twelve great Northwest states.

Exhibitors from Sault Ste. Marie to Seattle have sent word that they are coming to Minneapolis for the fifth annual show, and arrangements are being made to entertain 6,000 visitors during the four-day jubilee.

The executive committee of the Northwest association, of which James Gilosky, of St. Paul, is the president, and Dan W. Chamberlain, of Minneapolis, is the secretary, is handling the convention in a big way. Headquarters have been opened at 740 Temple Court, Minneapolis, where Treasurer C. E. Van Duzee and a large clerical force is kept on the jump.

A special publicity department has been organized by Charles G. Branham, editor of Amusements, the Northwest trade paper, and newspapers for a thousand miles in every direction are carrying stories of the exposition.

The best newspaper talent in the Northwest has been enlisted by Mr. Branham. Special stories are being sent out regarding every phase of the industry. Attractive paper has been prepared for the jubilee, which will be billed like a circus.

More than half of the space at the armory has been sold for booth displays, and arrangements are being made to place some of the exhibits in the balcony. One of the largest manufacturers of supplies in the country has announced that his concern will bring an entire exhibit to Minneapolis from San Francisco, where it was a feature of the exposition last summer.

Governor J. A. A. Burnquist, of Minnesota, has accepted an invitation to open the exposition on the night of May 2. He will be accompanied from St. Paul to the Minneapolis line by the entire state house family.

The parade through the business district of Minneapolis will be a big feature of the opening night. There will be numerous Charley Chaplin bands, elaborate floats, several marching clubs, and it is rumored a Ku Klux Klan, whose riders will be members of a popular Minneapolis saddle and bridle club. Motion pictures will be made as the parade passes along Nicollet avenue.

Feature pictures will be exhibited at the armory in two model theatres. A studio will be erected in the center of the floor.

The exposition will be open to the public four days and will close with a grand ball, in which several film celebrities will participate.

Maryland May Be Saddled with Censorship Burden

Contrary to Everybody's Expectations, Senate Passes the Obnoxious Measure—Bill Would Have Died in Committee If Not Favored by Governor Harrington

Special to Motion Picture News.

Baltimore, April 8.

MARYLAND is to have motion picture censorship.

A decided surprise was sprung on the motion picture interests of Maryland early Tuesday morning when the Senate passed the censorship bill, already passed by the House of Delegates of the Maryland Legislature at Annapolis. The measure passed its final reading in the Senate by a vote of 18 to 6, and will become a law as soon as Governor Harrington signs the paper.

It had been expected up until the last minute that the censorship bill would die in the committee room of the Senate. On Monday President Guy L. Wonders, of the Maryland Branch Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, received a tip that the bill would be reported favorably by the committee. Mr. Wonders immediately organized a delegation of Baltimore exhibitors and film men, made a hurried trip to Annapolis and spent the entire day and night working against the bill.

It is understood, however, that the governor favored the bill, and for this reason it was put through. The fact that Governor Harrington is thought to feel so kindly toward the measure, it is hardly probable that he will consent to veto it—the only chance remaining for eliminating censorship in this state.

The censorship bill provides for three censors, each of whom is to receive $2,400 a year salary. The state is to appropriate $12,000 for equipping an office, projecting room and screen room for the viewing of the film. The salaries of the office and the expenses are to be met by fees charged on the film. There will be a charge of two dollars per reel for each picture censored and one dollar per reel for every reprint.

There are also charges of twenty-five cents each for posters and slides to be used in advertising film. The next matter of importance from the motion picture men's standpoint is the personnel of the board of censors. There is no intimation up to the present time as to whom the governor will appoint, but applications from a number of Baltimoreans have already been filed in the governor's office, asking for recognition on the board.

Liberty Plant, in Philadelphia, Wiped Out by Fire

Chemicals Make Spectacular Blaze—Loss Estimated at $125,000—Films, Valued at $25,000, Are Found Intact in Vault After Flames Sweep Through Structure

Philadelphia, April 8.

FOUR bare walls standing in grim desolation are all that remains of the erstwhile fully-equipped plant of the Liberty Motion Picture Company, at 20 East Herman street, Germantown.

Early on Sunday last a disastrous fire of unknown origin completely destroyed the interior of the building which housed, besides the Liberty company, the Franklin Film Corporation's studio and the School de Luxe, a school of photoplay acting.

The fire, on account of the many chemicals stored in the building, made a spectacular blaze.

No one was injured, although many of the actors who lived in nearby boarding houses escaped in their night clothes. Slight damage was done to adjoining buildings.

All of the aniline dyes, precious on account of the scarcity induced by the war, were lost. Explosion after explosion shook the building and threatened the neighboring houses. The loss is estimated at $125,000.

The film vault in the yard withstood the flames. Films valued at $25,000, which were in the vault, remained intact. These and $200 worth of wigs and make-up, the property of W. M. Cone, a character actor, are all that were saved.

Mr. Cone, in spite of protests, broke through fire and police lines at the height of the blaze, rushed into the fiery furnace and managed to return unharmed with his property in his arms.

The Liberty company went into the hands of a receiver about a week ago. J. B. Mustin is treasurer and general manager of the company. Freeman Bernstein, president of the Franklin Film Company, with his wife and leading woman, May Ward, were in New York when the fire occurred.

DAY SYSTEMATIZES DEPARTMENTS

A. Dresner, formerly of Universal, has been added to the Metro forces of the Washington, D. C., office, in charge of the booking department. Mr. Dresner has served as roadman and exchange manager and knows his territory thoroughly.

President Lawrence Day has entirely made over the Metro exchange, instituting a series of offices, so that each department can better look after its own business and be in closer touch with its individual head.

YOUNG TO DIRECT BLANCHE SWEET FOR LASKY

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, April 8.

Director James Young has been assigned to the production of a subject with Blanche Sweet as star, and the actual filming of this will be commenced within a few days.

The mammoth new stage at the Lasky studio is nearing completion and plans are being made by the producing force for a dance to be given on it at an early date.

The stage will almost double the capacity of the space for sets. Later it is proposed that this is to be wholly enclosed so that it may be used in all kinds of weather.

The other improvements in progress at the Lasky studio including the increasing of the number of dressing rooms to twice the former number, are proceeding rapidly, and these will be ready for occupancy by the end of the present week.

Fannie Ward has begun rehearsals under the direction of George Melford for a photoplay founded on a story by Willard Mack. A cast composed of Jack Dean, James Neil, Gertrude Keller and other members of the Lasky stock company have been selected to support Miss Ward.

MAE CLOY AND TODD JOIN ROLIN

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, April 8.

The Rolin Film Company since moving into the new studio at 5813-27 Santa Monica boulevard, has made a number of additions to its producing staff. Mae Cloy has been engaged to play ingenue parts assisting Miss Bebe Daniels. Harry Todd, who is known the country over as "Mustang Pete," as the result of creating that role in Essanay Snakeville comedies, has also been engaged, as has Bud Jamison, formerly with the Niles Essanay forces. Harold Lloyd is to continue in the name part of the Rolin "Lonesome Luke" comedies for Pathé.

As this studio is quite a distance from the business district of Los Angeles, several members have become afflicted with the gasoline fever, and President Hal. Roach, Manager Dwight Whiting and Harold Lloyd have during the past week purchased new machines.

Starfilms, Ltd., Show Progressive Methods

Company Exploiting Metro Pictures in Canada Gets Attention of Press and Public—Group of Stars Presented at Once in Each City

IN exploiting Metro pictures in Canada, Starfilms, Ltd., of Montreal, have attracted wide attention from the public and the press by their progressive marketing methods and by the personal presentation in principal cities of several Metro stars. Following Valli Valli's successful appearance last fall, Madame Petrova and Mary Miles Minter have also been introduced personally to the Canadian theatregoers.

The latest novelty of Starfilms, Ltd., has been to bring a group of stars for one appearance in each city. This group includes Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. The personal appearance of stars was an innovation in Canada and has caused much favorable comment. The Standard, one of Montreal's leading papers, under the heading, "An Epoch Made in Motion Pictures," said:

"The Starfilms, Ltd., have undoubtedly established an epoch in the motion picture industry in Canada. They have shown us how pictures should be marketed; they have shown us stars of the very highest artistic worth, and over and above that they have been the means of introducing to the Canadian public several of these actors and actresses in person.

"We have, therefore, not only from an artistic but from a commercial point of view, to congratulate the Starfilms, Ltd., on the way they have made a record in the moving picture industry."

A large measure of credit for the successful development of the company is assigned to A. H. Sawyer, who has been general manager for the past three months. Branch offices will be opened May 1 in Winnipeg, St. Johns, N. B., Toronto, Vancouver, and Calgary.

Lasky and Famous Enter Picture Market in Africa

Productions of Both Concerns Will Be Handled by the African Film Trust, Ltd., Forerunner of Plan to Girdle the Globe with Distributing Outlets for Their Subjects

PURSUING the policy of international expansion which prompted the sending of E. M. Porter to South America for the purpose of making a survey of conditions, the Famous Players Film Company and Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company have just completed arrangements with the African Film Trust, Ltd., whereby the productions of these concerns will be handled in South Africa by the latter company.

By the terms of this agreement, in which the African company was represented by Max Schlesinger, attorney, of 10 Wall street, New York, all productions of the Famous Players and Lasky companies made since the formation of these feature concerns will be marketed through the African organization.

It is interesting to know that Mary Pickford in "Rags" and Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," which were presented on the Dark Continent by the respective producers, made as great a hit there as they did in this country.

As the recent thorough study of South America indicated, Famous Players and Lasky are taking active steps to perfect a great international system of distribution by which every corner of the globe will be methodically reached on a basis that will provide the greatest aggregate following for the productions of these concerns.

With the completion of the arrangements for the distribution of the Famous Players and Lasky productions in Africa, a world-wide distribution system as affecting these two important producing companies has been concluded with the exception of the continent of Asia and a few of the warring European countries.

Famous Players and Lasky films are distributed in England through J. D. Walker World's Films, Ltd., in the United States through Paramount Pictures Corporation.

DAYTON IS BACK AT ESSANAY STUDIO

Frank Dayton, veteran actor and one of the first members of the Essanay stock company, is back at the studio after an illness of some weeks.

MARIE DORO WILL MAKE LASKY DEBUT IN "HEART OF NORA FLYNN"

Marie Doro, who has gone to the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood, Cal., under contract for a period of years, will make her debut as a Lasky star on April 24 in a photoplay entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn," which is being directed by Cecil B. De Mille.

As Nora Flynn she will play an Irish nurse maid in a house of turbulent domesticity, and the role is said to give her exceptional opportunities for the display of her sympathetic powers.

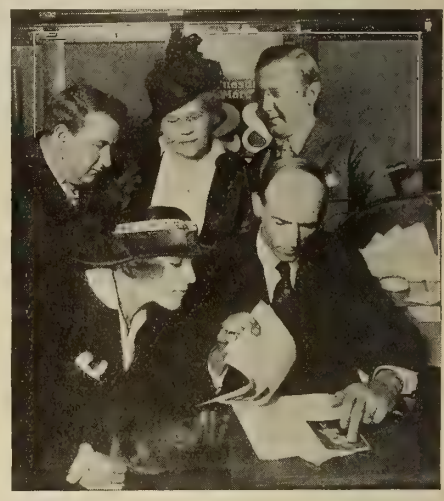
Elliott Dexter will play the principal role in support of Miss Doro, and the cast also includes Lola May, Ernest Joy, Charles H. West and other members of the Lasky company.

"FRIDAY, THE THIRTEENTH," LAWSON NOVEL, FOR WORLD

"Friday, the Thirteenth," the Thomas W. Lawson novel of high finance which created a sensation a few years ago, is to be picturized by the World Film Corporation, with Holbrook Blinn in the stellar role. The original story, as secured from Mr. Lawson by William A. Brady, the new art director of the World Film, has been strengthened by a series of situations written by Harvey F. Thew.

Mr. Blinn is completing "The Way of the World" at Baltimore, and as soon as it is finished work will begin with a strong cast on "Friday, the Thirteenth."

Los Angeles Confronted by Unusual Civic Problem



Judge White of Municipal Women's Court Recommends Appointment of "City Mother of Motion Picture Actresses" to Look After Shoals of Screen-Struck Girls

SCORES of screen struck girls coming to Los Angeles weekly to secure employment at motion picture studios, has caused Judge Thomas P. White of the Municipal Women's Court, Chief of Police Claire Snively and City Mother Anna Gilbert to recommend the creation of a new municipal officer to be known as City Mother of Motion Picture Actresses, and asked Mayor Charles Sebastian to appoint Anita King, the Paramount Lasky girl, as the first incumbent of this office.

This action on the part of the Los Angeles officials is the direct result of a local minister delivering a tirade from his pulpit in January. He charged that the motion picture "camps" were hot beds of immorality.

Investigations that followed showed that the minister could not substantiate his charges, as in all cases, the so-called "movie" actresses whose stories he had listened to were mere extra girls who had appeared in but few scenes, and did not have sufficient means to support themselves until they could work into permanent positions, and sought other means of livelihood. When brought to the attention of the police, they gave their vocations as motion picture actresses, and were spoken of as such by newspapers.

Judge Thomas P. White has followed the matter closely since these charges were made, and his investigations have proven to him conclusively that a repetition of such a scandal in motion picture circles could be prevented by stopping young girls who in many cases run away from home attempting to secure work at the studios.

Several weeks ago Judge White secured the aid of Miss King because she had talked to thousands of girls in her recent automobile trip across the continent, and since on other trips to attend openings of new theatres. Later Kenneth McGaffey, acting for the California Committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, was added to the investigating board.

The three, aided by City Mother Anna Gilbert, have called upon a large number of girls and held two weekly meetings, attended by those who wished to become screen actresses. The investigation brought out that complaints regarding conditions were made only by girls from foreign cities, and not by those who reside with their parents.

Employment departments of all studios will be requested by the officials to refer all applicants to the City Mothers. Investigations will be made to learn whether the girls have run away from home, and as to whether they have sufficient funds for their support until they can secure steady employment.

Weekly meetings will be held at the Civic Normal School center, where Miss King is to explain to the aspirants the difficulties that confront them in becoming screen players. They will be encouraged to accept employment in keeping with their talents.

The new department, brought about wholly by Judge White and Chief of Police Snively, because of their personal kindly interest in the major portion of the producing industry which is located here, shows that the civic authorities wish to make conditions here as pleasant as possible for people of the motion picture fraternity.

Judges Pass Favorably on a Censored Lubin

"Dollars and the Woman" Taken to Philadelphia Court, Contains Nothing to Offend a Legal Mind Though Censor Intellects Imagine There's Something Naughty in Film

WHEN the members of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors saw fit recently to place an embargo on the showing of "Dollars and the Women," a Lubin release through V-L-S-E, an appeal to the courts against their decision, was instantly taken.

The case came up in Philadelphia on March 31 before Judges Audenreid, Carr and Findletter, in the Court of Common Pleas. It being the first time that a trial of the kind had been held in this court, the justices resolved to visit the Lubin studio and gain first-hand knowledge of the subject by viewing the picture.

This was done, and it was apparent that the members of the distinguished audience were favorably impressed with the film, Judge Audenreid remarking that it was a beautiful picture. Decision was reserved, and the censor brigade, evidently somewhat wary of the outlook, made advances toward peace with the producers.

"We think," said one of them soothingly, "that you people were a trifle too hasty in rushing this matter into the courts. There is every likelihood that a compromise could be reached if it were talked over in detail."

"That" rejoined the Lubin legal representative, "is just where we differ in opinion. There can be no compromise where there is nothing to compromise, which is our contention in this case."

The praise accorded the film by Judge Audenreid found an echo in another quarter very far removed in social, if not business distance, from the judicial bench. For some time past, George Balsdon, manager of the V-L-S-E Boston branch office, has injected a little gaiety into the gloom of the Rhode Island penitentiary by exhibiting Big Four pictures to the inmates once a week. An enthusiastic reception was given to "Dollars and the Woman," by the prison patrons.

PART OF RECEIPTS FROM "WAR-TORN POLAND" FOR CHARITY

"War-Torn Poland," the exclusive feature production in six reels, prepared by the Selig company, was exhibited recently to Chicago newspapermen and delegations representing Polish Relief societies.

The films were universally praised for they were found to present the latest scenes from foreign battlefields and from unfortunate Poland.

There is a demand for State rights on "War-torn Poland," and the Selig Company has decided to place this feature on the market in this manner.

In response to demands of Polish Relief associations in almost every city of any size in this country, the Selig Company will see that state rights buyers co-operate with these associations and contribute a percentage from the showing of the pictures to the Polish Relief Fund.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

EXHIBITORS IN MANY CITIES FIND CHILDREN'S PERFORMANCES SUCCESSFUL

THE movement for children's performances is gaining momentum not only in the United States, but in Canada also. We have already published in this department a number of stories showing how exhibitors in many cities and towns have taken up the idea successfully.

In a majority of cases, exhibitors have found it wise to link up their children's shows with women's clubs, schools, or charitable organizations. For instance, in Cleveland, many isolated efforts to popularize the children's matinees failed until the interest of women's clubs and mothers' organizations were enlisted. Now, the Alhambra, Lakewood and Wind-a-Meer theatres can pack the house each time a children's matinee is announced.

The Lakewood now runs a continuous Saturday morning children's performance from 10 a. m. until 1 p. m. The Alhambra gives two shows each afternoon with special features for children Saturdays and during school vacations. The Wind-a-Meer runs specially advertisel children's performances two afternoons a week, Wednesdays and Saturdays.

The Kindergarten society gave a number of entertainments at Cleveland theatres during vacation week. The Knickerbocker theatre gave up one afternoon to the organization. The feature shown by the Kindergarten society was "Cinderella," featuring Mary Pickford and Owen Moore.

In the South, the idea is also gaining ground. The Majestic, Memphis, inaugurated a Saturday morning program for children on April 1. The Comus, Tupelo, Miss., and the Majestic, Grenada, Miss., have set aside Saturday matinees for children. The Wigwam theatre, Muskogee, Okla., and the Pastime, Carbon Hill, Ala., show children's programs on Friday. Two of these theatres, the Comus and the Majestic at Grenada, report to the United Film Service at Memphis that their special children's matinees are proving more successful than they had anticipated.

At Nanaimo, British Columbia, Manager George Beattie, of the Dominion theatre, ran the Universal's semi-educational feature, "The Nature Man," a short time ago, and on an afternoon during the engagement had a special complimentary performance for the children. Over 850 attended the performance, and were allowed to make all the noise they wanted to. Principal Manser of the high school made a little speech, thanking the management.

The fact that almost every child in the city went home talking about "The Nature Man" had an appreciable effect on business, and Manager Beattie intends to repeat the stunt when other suitable pictures are being shown.

MORRISON OF MEAFORD PULLS CLEVER IDEA ON SERIAL

Manager Morrison, of Medford, Ont., while running the Universal Serial "Master Key," had a small booklet printed, containing a short story of each episode of the film.

This was given to the patrons, so that they could follow with greater interest the coming reels. Mr. Morrison says the idea was entirely successful.

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

William Moore Patch, Managing Director of the Pitt Theatre, Pittsburgh, who has earned a reputation for staging spectacular effects in connection with the exhibition of leading screen subjects, may be said to have established a new record for himself in the elaborate framing he provided for "The Ne'er Do Well," the ten reel Selig-V-L-S-E production.

This consisted of a set portraying the Pacific end of the Panama Canal, which plays a prominent part in the scenic beauty of the story. The introduction of a tropical storm in this set proved a forceful innovation. The foreground of the stage presented a view of a dense jungle, ablaze with brilliant flowers and plants of gorgeous hue. In the swaying branches of numerous small trees, live monkeys, parrots, cockatoos, and other birds and beasts indigenous to the soil of Panama, disported themselves in true native fashion. It was a quaint Zoo on a miniature scale.

Particular attention was paid to the obtaining of effective musical accompaniment for the film. In addition to a twenty-five piece orchestra, an organ crew of ten men were employed back stage, producing delicately shaded voice and sound waves, while a further sensation was provided in the appearance of an octette of colored singers and dancers, whose gambols and tunefully rendered ballads scored a distinct hit.

RUNS "DAMAGED GOODS" FROM 8 A. M. TO MIDNIGHT

For the first time in the history of suburban houses in New Orleans, or big houses either, as far as it can be learned, an exhibitor opened at eight o'clock in the morning and ran until midnight, running a double shift of employees to handle the crowd.

This unusual number of performances was put on by P. O. Blankenship, owner of the Isis Theatre, in Dryades street, one of the largest and best equipped houses in the city.

"Damaged Goods" was the attraction. It played on Sunday, April 2, on double shift, and so successfully did the picture bring out the crowds in what is a densely populated section of the Crescent City, that Mr. Blankenship held it over for another day. On Monday the theatre opened at eight o'clock a. m., sharp, at which time there were several hundred people on hand.

"Damaged Goods" has been shown on three occasions before in New Orleans, so this stunt seems to show what an exhibitor can do with a second or third run picture.

TOPEKA THEATRE INVITES POLICEMEN AND FIRE FIGHTERS AS GUESTS

The Orpheum Theatre, Topeka, Kan., recent showed the Keystone comedy, "Cinders of Love," wherein the Keystone fire and police departments participate. The Orpheum invites every policeman and fireman in Topeka to attend as their guests, adding —"No extra charge of admission."

The Iris Theatre in the same city in one of its daily advertisements had this as a footnote: "N. B.—Answer to numerous telephone inquiries: NO. The 'biggest and best amusement enterprise in Topeka,' advertised for sale on 'account dissolution of stockholders,' is NOT the Iris Theatre."

AFTER-MATINEE TEAS STARTED BY LOS ANGELES MANAGER

After-matinee teas have been introduced by Manager Sam Rock of the Majestic theatre, Los Angeles, where Triangle plays are shown. Every lady entering the theatre between the hours of 11 a. m. and 4 p. m. was presented with an invitation to the tea served in the cafe of a department store in an adjoining building.

Norma Talmadge and Seena Owen, who are featured in the current week's subject, "Martha's Vindication," at the theatre, were hostesses.

TRIANGLE EXHIBITORS LEARN VALUE OF CO-OPERATION

"With the evolution of other things in the motion picture industry, there has developed a progressive tendency toward genuine co-operation among exhibitors," says the current "Triangle," issued by the Triangle Film Corporation. "While Exhibitors' Leagues and Societies have been in existence for years and while they have achieved many triumphs in several departments of their work, not until recently have they shown an inclination to co-operate on matters pertaining to 'collective' advertising and general acceleration, for the promotion, not only of their own interests, but also the popularity of their pictures.

"Reports are current to the effect that in many sections Triangle customers have organized 'district' advertising clubs. The entire scheme has resulted in a concentration of ideas and a crystallization of all loose ends into an effective unit.

"With a common and general working fund exhibitors could increase their daily results by a hundred per cent. Big results today are not obtained through individual effort—but through co-operation of big numbers of individuals. There is no reason why theatres should be conducted along lines of each man for himself. A theatre can be run like any other legitimate enterprise—on sound and dignified business principles."

INVITES CANADIAN RECRUITS TO SEE "BATTLE CRY"

A large amount of desirable publicity was obtained on a recent evening by the Globe theatre, Vancouver, B. C., during the run of "The Battle Cry of Peace." The officers and men of the 158th Overseas Battalion (Duke of Connaught's Own) were invited to attend the performance, and nearly four hundred men, all of those recruited so far, responded.

Headed by their brass band, they marched through Hastings and Granville streets, the two main thoroughfares of the city, countermarched in front of the theatre, and splitting the columns in front of the house, entered by twos through both doors. The officers of the battalion occupied the boxes, and the balance of the house was quickly filled by friends of the soldiers.

This picture was shown the following week at the Royal Victoria theatre in Victoria, and Manager Clifford Denham admitted soldiers in uniform for half price. Fifty cents and a dollar were the prices obtained in both cities, with matinees at twenty-five and fifty cents.

COMEDIAN ASHER VISITS ST. LOUIS THEATRES

Max Asher, Joker-Universal comedian, appeared in several St. Louis theaters recently and made little lectures on the way Joker comedies are made, besides acting out scenes in which he appeared in a film shown at the theatres he visited, while the film was being screened.

The Best, the Chippewa, and other theaters were visited by Mr. Asher.

BRIEF HINTS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

"Don't be afraid of the snake—the Ohio Board of Nonsensors cut out his fangs."

This appeared in a throwaway issued by Sam Bullock, of the Boulevard Theatre, Cleveland, advertising some animal pictures he was showing. It is in line with what we were talking about in this column last week: fighting the censors in your advertising.

Mr. Bullock is a militant exhibitor. He never loses an opportunity to attack censorship by ridicule, sarcasm, or any other method at his command.

He does not submit tamely to the injustice of censorship. Instead he lets the public know where he stands. He fights the censors with publicity.

It is inconceivable that the great mass of exhibitors can much longer remain silent on the single supreme menace to their business. Sooner or later, they will realize that in the house organ, on the screen, or in any other effective way they must combat the menace.

If the public, as a whole, is indifferent to the danger of censorship, it is because the public has never been systematically aroused against it. It is the exhibitor's duty to do his share in arousing the public.

ELECTION NIGHT CROWD SEES "THE YAQUI" ON STREET SCREEN

While a number of theatre owners in Kansas City, Mo., were content with announcing the result of the recent spring election from the stages of their houses, which was very good, it remained for George Bowles, who is the publicity man for the Blue Bird Photoplay Co., to make the big hit.

Mr. Bowles and an evening newspaper went into partnership the night of the election and he was allowed to stretch a screen above the place where the bulletins were posted.

This newspaper office is situated in the heart of the city and the streets were packed that night with observers. It was estimated that over twenty thousand people stood and watched Mr. Bowles's screen show slides telling of the Blue Bird's qualities and viewing a public showing of "The Yaqui," which was the picture that he exhibited there.

OMAHA EXHIBITOR STARTS STREET CAR ADVERTISING

Manager Shirley of the Muse theatre, Twenty-fourth and Farnam streets, Omaha, Neb., is one of the first exhibitors in the Middle West to begin advertising in the street cars. On a neat card with plenty of blank space and big enough letters to allow reading from quite a distance away, he brings out the following features:

"Exhaust open air ventilation—Fireproof construction throughout—Omaha's newest and best equipped playhouse. Designed and built for the convenience and safety of our patrons—THE MUSE—Shows only the best Photo plays—Farnam and Twenty-fourth streets."

DECORATES THEATRE WALLS WITH OIL PAINTINGS

A. D. Pappas celebrated his first year's business in the Majestic Theatre, 10th and Franklin avenue, St. Louis, by decorating the house with eight handsome oil paintings, which he has had framed and hung on the side walls of the theatre. The paintings are excellent copies of the old masters, and occasion much admiration and comment from the many patrons of the house.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"ARTIE, MILLIONAIRE KID" WILL APPEAR ON 17th TO BRING DOLLARS TO EXHIBITOR COFFERS

ERNEST TRUEX and Dorothy Kelly in "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," a five-part rollicking comedy of the Blue Ribbon Feature brand, listed for release on Monday, April 17, starts off the program for that week.

Mr. Truex as Artie, expelled from college with the degree of "N.G.," decides, after his father disowns him, to "make good." He turns book agent and in his wanderings meets Annabelle, played by Dorothy Kelly, with whom he falls in love. The proceeds made on selling books enable him to buy the only paper in that section from a "down and out" editor.

When he learns that his father, a railroad magnate, intends running a branch of his road through Byways, Artie makes Updike, the owner of the land wanted for the "right-of-way," believe that his property is not the location desired.

Artie's friend, Jack, masquerading in female attire, further wins Updike over to the cause and induces him to sell out to a syndicate formed by Artie. They arrange for Updike to purchase land on which they have an option, telling him it is the property wanted. Updike in turn tells the members of Artie's syndicate that they have been cheated and a mad rush for the Bee office follows.

When they demand the return of their money, Artie pays them off with Updike's cash. He refuses to return the amount invested by Annabelle's pa, which greatly peeves that gentleman. Things look bad for Artie with Annabelle, since she has discovered him in the arms of the "widow," but everything ends happily when Pa comes to make the purchase and is greatly surprised when he learns he has to do business with his own son, whom he has not seen in months. The climax comes when Artie claims Annabelle and the identity of the "widow" is made known.

Mr. Truex and Miss Kelly are supported by John T. Kelly, Albert Roccardi, William R. Dunn and Girardot.

Frank Daniels in another adventure, "Mr. Jack's Artistic Sense," of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," listed on the V-L-S-E program for Monday, April 17, has many funny experiences with an artist model in an art studio while inspecting the painting of his son's portrait.

Rose Tapley is seen as Daniels' wife and Arthur Cozine plays the part of the son. C. Jay Williams supervised the filming of this photoplay.

Monday, April 17, is also the day on which "Life and Training in the U. S. N." will be ready for exhibition. It is a single reel subject depicting the life of Uncle Sam's "jack tars," from the recruit at the Newport training school to the highest officials in Navy matters. Scenes at Annapolis and other well-known points are shown. It was taken by special permission and in co-operation with the United States Navy.

"His Lucky Day" is the title of the one-part comedy on April 21, in which Freddy gets arrested, but manages to escape and succeeds in locking up the constable. William Dangman plays the part of Freddy, and is supported by William Lytell, Jr., George O'Donnell, Harry Mayo, Lucille Crane, Florence Natol. Scenario by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

"A Caliph of the New Bagdad," a three-part Broadway Star Feature by William Addison Lathrop, on the General Film Program for Saturday, April 22, presents Van Dyke Brooke, Leah Baird, Templar Saxe, Edward Elkas, Emmanuel A. Turner, Harry Fisher and Charles Edwards, and is a picture telling of a romance in a boarding house, and gives us an insight into the ways of the people of the "painted world." Besides playing an important part in the production, Van Dyke Brooke also produced the photoplay.

"WOMAN WHO DID NOT CARE" FROM SELIG ON APRIL 24

The Selig company announces two productions for release through General Film service. On Monday, April 24, "The Woman Who Did Not Care," a multiple reel feature drama, will be presented.

This drama features Eugenie Besserer, Edith Johnson and Harry Mestayer. The story has to do with the remorse that comes to a woman who, under a nom de plume conducts a spicy column of society gossip in a newspaper.

On Saturday, April 29, "Badgered" will be released through General Film service. Harry Mestayer takes the leading role and is ably supported by Edith Johnson, Al W. Filson and James Bradbury. A year ago, William N. Selig stated in an authorized interview: "There will always be a market for picture-plays in one, two and three reels."

Since that time, the policy of the Selig company has been to make every production better than the previous one.

"ESCAPADES OF ESTELLE" FROM GAUMONT ON NINETEENTH

For release as a split-reel with "See America First," the Gaumont scenic, Cartoonist Harry Palmer has invented as his Kartoon Komic of April 19 "The Escapades of Estelle."

Estelle is a portly "cul'ed" lady. Mr. Palmer sees to it that her vanity is frequently fractured. On the same reel are views of the Continental Divide and Cripple Creek, Col.

"APRIL" HEADS HORSLEY-MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES FOR WEEK OF 10TH

HEADING the list of Mutual releases for the week of April 10 are the Masterpictures De Luxe, "April," produced by American, and "The Leopard's Bride," produced by David Horsley.

"April" is a mountain romance of the heart interest type enacted by a selected cast in which Helene Rosson and E. Forrest Taylor are the principals. The Horsley offering is a drama of the Orient, featuring Margaret Gibson, supported by William Clifford and a large cast, assisted by the Bostock animals.

The list for the week also includes two three-part dramas, "Silent Selby," from the American studios, with Anna Little, Tom Chatterton, Jack Richardson, Dick La Reno and others; and another American, "The Wayfarers," featuring Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich. The first is a Western drama, while the second is a psychological study of a weak man's character.

Varied in subject are the three two-part dramas on the program. The first is the American drama of society, "The Pendulum of Chance," featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne. The Thanhouser subject is a fantasy, "The Romance of the Hollow Tree," with Wayne Arey and Kathryn Adams in the chief roles. "The Flickering Light" is a Mustang Western, with Frank Borzage and Anna Little in the leads.

The comedy releases include "Sapville's Stalwart Son" and "The Overworked Oversea Overseer," issued under the Falstaff brand.

The Vogue offerings are "Rube's Hotel Tangel," with fun-maker Rube Miller, and "A Mix-up in Photos," in which Rena Rogers shatters the blues. "Peanuts and Powder," with Carol Halloway and John Sheehan, and "The Improbable Yarn of McQuirk," with Orral Humphrey, are the Beauty comedies.

Billy Armstrong will again chase away the glooms in a Cub offering "Almost Right."

The Mutual Weekly and the Gaumont special feature, "See America First," are other releases of the same week.

"TWILIGHT SLEEP" DRUG BASIS OF KALEM'S "WAR OF WITS"

WITH "The Social Pirates" off to a flying start, according to reports from exchanges throughout the country, interest is now aroused in the coming episodes of this Kalem series by George Bronson-Howard.

"A War of Wits," "The Millionaire Plunger," and "The Master Swindlers," are three of the two reel episodes which are promised for release during the next few weeks.

Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby are continuing their crusading career, aiding those who have suffered wrongs by watching wits with the unscrupulous schemers who prey on the helpless.

"A War of Wits" finds the girls crossing swords with a character known as Dr. Hyoscine, from the fact that he uses that insidious drug to aid him in extorting money from his wealthy patients. Hyoscine is the drug used in the famous "twilight sleep" operation, and its faculty of completely effacing from the memory all occurrences while under its influence is used by the crafty schemer.

"The Millionaire Plunger" shows the fascinating heroines teaching a lesson to Tomlinson Gerry, a wealthy idler, who was brought to the girls' attention by his heartless refusal to aid the poverty-stricken victim of his father's stock-jobbing manipulations.

Another theme of timely import is the basis of the plot of "The Master Swindlers," which is scheduled for release May 1.

George Bronson-Howard has really in this story built his action around the disappearance of the famous Mona Lisa from the Paris Louvre.

In this picture Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby face a desperate struggle in combating the clever crooks of the art world who find easy victims among millionaire art-lovers.

BLUEBIRDS INTRODUCE KERRIGAN ON APRIL 24 IN "GAY LORD WARING"

Bluebird Photoplays introduce J. Warren Kerrigan with the release for April 24, and present Lois Wilson, the Alabama prize beauty, as his leading lady in "The Gay Lord Waring," a screen version by F. McGrew of Houghton Townley's story, in which Otis Turner has directed the Bluebird camera actors.

"The Gay Lord Waring" is a feature dealing with the idle rich in association with English nobility. Mr. Kerrigan impersonates a lordling who spends bank notes as though they were cigarette papers, lives on borrowed money, and finally must settle accounts.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN AND LOIS WILSON IN "THE GAY LORD WARING" (Bluebird)

In the process of "paying the fiddler" Lord Waring participates in no end of exciting incidents and ultimately works out his own salvation, effectually assisted by a brace of opportune and fatal accidents.

Maude George plays an adventuress role with artistic effect. Bertram Grassby is the villain in the piece; J. H. Holland plays the role of a get-rich-certainly money lender, and Duke Worne has a character role of importance to the plot.

SCENES FROM "THE MAN OF SORROW," WILLIAM FARNUM'S NEXT PHOTOPLAY FOR WILLIAM FOX, WITH DOROTHY BERNARD

"LOVE RIOT," "AN OILY SCOUNDREL" AND "BATHHOUSE BLUNDER" ARE COMING KEYSTONES

Recent Triangle-Keystone shipments from the coast to New York include the Charles Murray film, "A Love Riot"; Fred Mace's "An Oily Scoundrel"; "A Bathhouse Blunder," with Mae Busch, and Mack Swain in "By Stork Delivery." Mack Sennett has speeded up production all along the line, and his recent addition of three new companies is already showing results.

New comedies to be released this month have as stars Harry Gribbon, Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin.

Ford Sterling's comedy will probably be called "The Show Cure." The star has the role of a physician with a remedy for anything that ails the patient. Snow appears to be a prominent ingredient of this cure and a large and hungry grizzly bear is active in the supporting cast.

"Bucking Society" is the present title of Conklin's picture. A lawyer, induced by the leaden inspiration of a pair of forty-fours, joins a band of cowboys. Louella Maxam, "Shorty" Hamilton, Dora Rogers and Jack Henderson have the important roles.

Gribbon is rounding out a role of gang leader, and it is predicted that his gang will be established securely in the various groups of Keystone funmakers. Gloria Swanson, Wallace Berry, Guy Woodward and William Mason are members of the gay gang.

"THE FIRE OF ST. JOHN" CHANGED TO "THE FLAMES OF JOHANNIS"

The five-act photoplay feature from the Sudermann drama, set for release through the V-L-S-E by the Lubin Company as "The Fire of St. John," has been renamed. The new feature, in which Nance O'Neil is starred, is to be issued under the title of "The Flames of Johannis." The change is illustrative of frequent complications arising in photoplay nomenclature.

The scenario from which Edgar Lewis prepared the photoplay for the Lubin Company was taken from the Sudermann drama as originally published. Some years ago a stage adaptation was made, in which Nance O'Neil starred, under the title of "The Fires of St. John."

It is to avoid identification with this stage version that the Lubin Company has changed the title of its pretentious photoplay feature to "The Flames of Johannis." With this change the feature is now ready for release.

WOMAN WRITES "LAW DECIDES" AND HELPS IN ITS DIRECTION FOR "V"

"The Law Decides" is the title of a new Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, scheduled for release April 24. It is a seven-reeler and said to have all the dramatic situations common to its theme, love, marriage, divorce and distribution of a large estate. It is a typical screen story and was written by Marguerite Bertsch, a Vitagraph staff author.

In the cast are Harry T. Morey, Dorothy Kelly, Donald Hall, Bobby Connelly, Louise Beaudet and Adele Kelly, all shown to advantage.

In collaboration with Director William P. S. Earle, Miss Bertsch produced the picture. This was her first attempt at the other phase of the art, and she succeeded so well that she will, in the future, not only direct her own work but that of others as well.

MacQUARRIE FINISHES "NANCY'S BIRTHRIGHT"

After prolonged fights with unfavorable weather conditions, Director Murdock J. MacQuarrie, of the Signal Film Corporation, and his company of players, have completed the production of a five-reel picture entitled "Nancy's Birthright."

Edythe Sterling is featured in the dual role of mother and daughter in the two periods of the story. Opposite her is Norbert A. Myles. Millard K. Wilson makes a despised heavy, while V. T. Henderson and Francis MacDonald aid him in his nefarious business. It is in this picture that Director MacQuarrie, for the first time since joining the Signal staff, has played one of the leading roles.

THIS TRIANGLE PLAY "HAS FOUR CORNERS"

The "eternal triangle" gives way to a four-cornered love affair in "The Secret Mating," a five-reel American Mutual Masterpicture, by J. Edward Hungerford.

William Russell is directing the production and has the lead in the play. Two mismated couples are thrown together and, while the husband of one woman and the wife of one man are too honorable to allow their mutual attractions to become apparent, their respective mates are not so particular.

As a result one husband tries to teach the other a lesson. Russell, Hylda Holliss, Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan have the principal roles.

O'BRIEN DIRECTS MARY PICKFORD IN "ETERNAL GRIND"

Mary Pickford makes her first appearance on the screen since her triumph as "Poor Little Peppina" in the Famous Players production, "The Eternal Grind," which is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program April 10. It is a story of the hardships endured by a factory girl, upon whom there rests the responsibility of caring for her two younger sisters.

"The Eternal Grind" was directed by John B. O'Brien, who produced "The Foundling."

In support of the star there appear several well-known players, among them John Bowers, Robert Cain, Loretta Blake, Dorothy West and J. Albert Hall.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

THE threatened curtailment of production has already made its mark on the activities of the studios in the eastern section. Although there is plenty doing, many of the studios which have been bustling with life all winter are either housing a lone company, or are for rent, and in others there is a marked thinning in the ranks of the regular and extra workers.

To offset this a number of the companies which have been south and west for the winter months are now on their way back, or will be back within the next two weeks. Among these is the Fox Company, under Oscar Apfel, which has been at work in Los Angeles since November. This company, which includes among its players William Farnum and Dorothy Bernard, is due in the east within a week. Then there are the Gaumont and Thanhouser companies in Jacksonville, which will re-establish themselves in Flushing and New Rochelle, respectively.

George Irving will begin work on a new picture for the Frohman Amusement Company, to be released through World Film, this week. The scenario has just been completed by Anthony P. Kelly, and actual work will begin at the Fifty-second street studio in a few days.

Marshal Farnum is to produce a picture for Jesse Goldburg. Work will begin this week. The picture, when completed, will be released through the Popular Pictures Corporation.

President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Inc., is in New York on a business trip, having arrived from Chicago several days ago. Mr. Hutchinson reported everything moving smoothly at the American, Signal and Mustang studios, where a number of important productions are now under way. He expects to remain in New York for some days, during which he will participate in a series of important conferences with President Freuler, of the Mutual.

Lawrence Swinburne, of the Thanhouser studios, who portrays the Bard of Avon in the forthcoming Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe, "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player," in order to get the proper touch to his makeup spent many hours studying the oils of the famous William hanging in the Museum of Art. By means of a card of introduction he was also permitted to study a Shakespeare painting by a famous artist, decorating the wall of one of New York's wealthiest men who is noted for his wonderful art collection.

Preparations are under way at the Gaumont-Mutual studios in Flushing for the reception of the great army of players who have been working during the past five months at the winter studios in Jacksonville. Among the newcomers to Flushing after the closing of the Southern studios will be Gertrude McCoy, Iva Shepard, Alexander Gaden, Marguerite Courtot and several other stars, all of whom have been engaged since the opening of the Jacksonville plant.

Kittens Reichert, the six-year-old William Fox player, has recovered from her attack of measles and gone back to work in a new picture with Stuart Holmes and Dorothy Bernard. Unlike Little Jane Lee, who believes that all of Holmes screen villainies are all too true and terrible, and dislikes his accordingy, Kittens likes the Fox villain and begged to work in the picture with him.

William Fox announces that he has found a new child actress. She is just a little three and a half year old mite from sunny Italy with eyes that will haunt you like the smile of the Mona Lisa. Her name is Miriam Batista, and she will appear in "Blazing Love" with Virginia Pearson.

After viewing and personally editing her first Fox picture, "Slander," with William Fox, Madame Bertha Kalich has gone to Atlantic City, N. J., for an outing, taking along with her a party of friends. The tragedienne is now reading the manuscripts of new productions, preliminary to reaching a decision with Mr. Fox as to a second picture.

Army of Modistes for Miss Clayton

Marguerite Clayton, pretty Essanay leading woman, is surrounded by a corps of trained modistes who are making up a score of gowns of the civil war period, which she will wear in her next feature production, "According to the Code," a five-act drama written by Charles Michelson. Miss Clayton takes the leading feminine part, playing with Lewis S. Stone, the masculine lead.

Warda Howard, Essanay leading woman, is regarded as exceptionally well fitted for her part in Essanay's forthcoming feature, "That Sort." The play takes her all through the European watering places, including the Riviera and Monte Carlo. Miss Howard has visited all of these places and has made a close study of the life of the habitues.

The play is taken from the celebrated stage production of the same title written by Basil McDonald Hastings and will be released shortly on the V-L-S-E program.

Lewis S. Stone, who appeared with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," a recent Essanay feature, will shortly take the leading part in "According to the Code," soon to be constructed by Essanay. Those who have seen him in "The Havoc" and know the story of the other piece, will readily appreciate how well cast is this leading man.

It is expected that the Hickson gowns worn by Anna Nilsson in Pathé's "Who's Guilty?" series will make much food for conversation among the women who view the film throughout the country. The well-known firm of modistes has gone to the limit of their resources in making these creations for the star and they are the very last word of what's what in style. In each episode she appears in a new set of frocks, all of which will set the feminine heart aflutter.

"Have a Heart, George"

"Have a heart, George," was the way Pearl White, starring in Pathé's "The Iron Claw," expressed her idea of the scenarios for the serial. She was talking to George Brackett Seitz, the scenario editor, who is responsible for her "Perils," "Exploits," and her encounters with the villainous Legar. Mr. Seitz had thought of some new stunts which were of such a degree of daring that even "peerless, fearless Pearl" had to ask for a little consideration.

Some demon statistician with a natural bent for figures has figured out just how many times Pearl White has endangered her life and limb in the pursuit of her calling. He makes it twenty-six times in Pauline, fourteen times in Elaine, and several times already in "The Iron Claw." Miss White has thus far escaped very serious injury.

Hugh Ford characterizes as gross calumniators those individuals who attempted to find any connection between his total loss of voice last week and the Willard-Moran "boxing contest." His detractors claim that Ford absentmindedly attempted to direct the bout when it got too slow to suit his artistic temperament. They also point to the loss of the Famous Players' director-general's voice as another instance of the brutality of prize fighting.

There was an indignation meeting held at the Famous Players studio when J. Searle Dawley and Sidney Olcott met on the day that the latter returned from Bermuda where he went for the purpose of staging "The Innocent Lie" with Valentine Grant.

Olcott button-holed Dawley and started to recite the difficulties which he had encountered with the weather on his trip, which had in fact forced him to prolong an intended four-day stay on the island to fourteen days.

But Dawley promptly countered with the recital of the troubles which he had in finding deep snow for Marguerite Clark's "Out of the Drifts" and the bout was called a draw by Studio Manager Albert Kaufman.

Having served her term behind the ribbon counter for "The Saleslady," Hazel Dawn is now in the Georgia mountains cavorting about in her bare tootsies in the interests of her next Famous Players-Paramount picture, "The Feud Girl." But after one has been a film star for a time, these sudden transitions, for professional reasons, become a part of one's routine, and are not in the least alarming.

"Moment Before" for Miss Frederick

Having enjoyed her "wild, bare-footed existence" in "Audrey," Pauline Frederick was enthusiastic when told that she was to play a Gypsy in her next Famous Players production on the Paramount Program, "The Moment Before," which is based on Israel Zangwill's play of that name. But, remembering the beach nettles which she encountered in Jacksonville while there on her last trip, she sighed with relief when informed that her particular gypsy was not of the bare-footed variety.

Immediately after finishing "Elusive Isabel" and "Spring Time and Tillie Tod" for the Universal, Florence Lawrence, the old Imp star, resigned. She has announced no reason for leaving, but as she had no written or verbal contract with the Universal. President Laemmle had no means of making her stay at the big new Fort Lee studios.

King Baggot in his Universal-Imp Company under the direction of Henry Otto, has returned from Savannah where the finishing scenes of "Half a Rogue" were taken. "Half a Rogue" is the first five-reel picture in which King Baggot has ever appeared.

At the present time this company is working on a real unique production which will be called "A Borrowed Identity." In this picture Mr. Baggot plays two parts, but the parts are not of the usual double identity kind where one man plays his own twin brother. Each character is a totally different person with natures varying to the two extremes of goodness and badness.

This picture will be a two-reel screen adaptation of one of Robert Thomas Hardy's short stories which appeared recently in Snappy Stories magazine. Edna Hunter, regular leading lady for Mr. Baggot, will play opposite him.

Mary Fuller, who won fame first in one and two-reel subjects but has been playing in five-reel pictures altogether of late, is back at work in a two-reel. Mrs. Catherine Carr was the author, and the story, which is called "The Mystery of the Limousine," is of the surprise-ending kind.

Miss Fuller is shown done to death at the opening of the picture and then the action switches to the story of her life. William Welsh appears as her first suitor. She is finally wed by a banker, played by Joe Gerard. He becomes jealous of Anthony Merlo's attentions to his wife. Merlo is the last one to be seen with Miss Fuller before her "death."

"Shot" Oil Well for "Toilers"

The actual shooting of a real oil well will be one of the big scenes in "The Toilers," the new Lubin multiple reel feature photoplay by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, in which Nance O'Neil is starred.

The theme of "The Toilers" is described as love, oil and money in equal parts. Edgar Lewis, who is directing the making of the photoplay, is an extremist in the matter of realism, and to put the aroma of petroleum into the picture, he took Miss O'Neil and her supporting principals to the Galloway oil fields near Franklin, Penn., where fifteen busy days were employed in unfolding the story of the camera amid shacks, derricks and tanks.

The response to an advertisement Mr. Lewis placed in the local papers for extras would indicate that many "Franklinites" consider themselves natural born moving picture actors.

In honor of Mr. Lewis' visit, the Orpheum theatre is running the "Great Divide," and the Princess theatre, "The Bondman," both of which were directed by him.

Scenarios are in preparation for the transformation of the Rex Beach novels into photoplay features by the Lubin Company. "The Barrier," "The Silver Horde" and "The Iron Trail" are underlined for production. The Lubin Company is determined to make each play mark an epoch in screen achievement. The companies will be established in the localities described by Mr. Beach in the novels.

Fifty students of the Mechanical Engineering Department of the Case School of Applied Science of Cleveland, Ohio, headed by their professor, F. H. Vose, visited the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn last week. A representative of the company guided the party through the plant and explained the process of picture making.

ACTORS' FUND CAMPAIGN WILL GET AID FROM GERALDINE FARRAR

Geraldine Farrar is the latest recruit among the active workers in the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America. She has volunteered her services in the Grand Tribute Matinee, which is to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House on May 16.

Miss Farrar has sent the following letter to Samuel Goldfish, national chairman of the Motion Picture Campaign:

"DEAR MR. GOLDFISH:

"You and Mr. Frohman know my deep interest in the admirable project you have now in hand to raise $1,000,000 for the benefit of the Actors' Home. Of course I am delighted to help, and you may be assured of my hearty co-operation.

"Sincerely,

"GERALDINE FARRAR-TELLEGEN."

BOSTON COMPANY TO MAKE INDUSTRIALS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Boston, April 8.

The Consolidated Film and Amusement Company has been incorporated by prominent Boston business men. It is the intention of this corporation to produce educational and industrial films. This company proposes and is undertaking contracts with manufacturers of advertised food products for film reproductions of the factory and of the processes of manufacture.

It is also the intention of the company to produce plays and comedies employing high class talent. The company is negotiating for a studio site in the immediate vicinity of Boston and active preparations are under way for the immediate production of films.

You Can't Lose on "Girl Who Won," Thinks Pathe

Particularly When "The Maude Adams of the Screen," Jackie Saunders, Is in Cast—"Girl That Didn't Matter" Will Matter in Box Office Receipts, Company Believes

THE Pathé Exchange, Inc., whose late releases have been confined to five-reel features, serials, one-reel comedies, the Pathé News and split reel educationals and scenics, now announces short dramas for release.

On Saturday, April 8, "The Girl Who Won," a three-reeler featuring Miss Jackie Saunders, "The Maude Adams of the Screen," and produced by Balboa, will be released.

Saturday, April 15, sees the release of "The Girl That Didn't Matter" is the story reeler made by Balboa, featuring Margaret Landis and the famous Andrew Arbuckle, brother of the equally famous Macklyn. "The Girl That Didnt Matter" is the story of "no-account" girl who arrives and a senator who almost doesn't. But the senator is saved by the girl just before his 'scutcheon is discolored, and all ends happily. Margaret Landis plays the girl and Andrew Arbuckle makes a "diamond-in-the-rough" hick senator.

Emmy Wehlen and Howard Estabrook are featured in a two-reel drama slated for release on April 29, "Dross and Diamonds." This picture was made by the Arrow Film Corporation and features two of the screen's headliners.

The story is one of a young man of a highly sensitive nature whose father, a police captain, by his lack of sympathy and understanding, has a great deal to do with the lad's final landing "outside the pale." Emmy Wehlen (who appears by courtesy of the Rolfe Photo-Plays, Inc.) is the girl who prefers diamonds to love and deserts her sweetheart at a crucial point in his life. Howard Estabrook is the unfortunate youth.

The Pathé serial department is flourishing like the proverbial green bay tree. G. A. Smith, the serial director, has added to his staff Irving Weil, for a number of years connected with the editorial department of the New York Evening Journal. Harry J. Walsh will also aid in the serial department in addition to his work in the advertising department, of which P. A. Parsons is the manager.

Four men are now traveling throughout the country lining up the newspapers in every important city and town on current and future serials.

The new series, "Who's Guilty?" will be released on May 8, and is evolved from an entirely new idea and one that will arouse widespread interest. Another big feature is also under preparation to be released at the close of the highly successful "The Iron Claw." Several very prominent players have been engaged for this production, but the details are being kept secret for later release.

Thanhouser Club Ball in Jacksonville Nets $1,050

Profits Divided Between Motion Picture Campaign of the Actors' Fund and the Children's Home Society of Florida—Film Organization Plans More Events of Like Character

FROM Jacksonville, Fla., the Thanhouser contingent send an account of a successful ball given under the auspices of the Thanhouser Club. The profits were divided between the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund and the Children's Home Society of Florida. The function did more to cement the bond between the people of Jacksonville and the film folk than anything that has as yet happened there.

George A. Grimmer is president of the Thanhouser Club, with Mayor Bowden as honorary vice-president. George Webber, Leo Wirth and W. Ray Johnston make up the list of officers. At the ball, which was held in the great hall of the Windsor Hotel last Friday, Harris Gordon, Thanhouser leading man, was chairman of arrangements and Thomas A. Curran was in charge of the floor. Valkyrien (Baroness Dewitz), Louise Emerald Bates, Barbara Gilroy, Violet Hite and Gladys Dore busied themselves among the guests, and the Thanhouser directors—W. Eugene Moore, Ernest C. Warde and William A. Howell—pitched in enthusiastically.

The gross receipts were $1,050, which will leave a snug profit.

GOLDSTEIN STOPS IN LOS ANGELES

M. Goldstein, assistant to M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchange system, is in Los Angeles for a stay of several days while on a trip over the entire western part of the country to visit exchanges.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Los Angeles, April 8.

UPON advice from the New York office, Business Manager John Waldron and Production Manager Lee Daugherty, of the Biograph studios, have issued notice to all members of the producing staff advising that the company would discontinue production on April 8, with the completion of the subjects now being filmed. These subjects are "Merry Mary," a comedy drama, and "Fit for the Burning," a three-reel melodrama being produced by Walter Coyle and J. Farrell Macdonald, respectively.

All players who were brought to the coast by the Biograph Company will be taken back to New York City, leaving Los Angeles on Wednesday, April 12. It was stated at the studio that the producing staff is to be thoroughly reorganized, and that production will later be taken up, either in Los Angeles or New York City.

Chloroform plays a very important part in the Keystone film, "A Dash of Courage," which was completed last week, under the direction of Charles Parrot, and supervision of Mack Sennett. Harry Gribbon is featured in this as a crook who, with the aid of his gang, overcomes a police lieutenant en route to a village to solicit funds for a retired policemen's home.

In the disguise of the lieutenant, the crook becomes the guest at the village Croesus' home, and selected by the man of wealth as an ideal person to be his son-in-law. In the meantime the crook's pals have put all the police to sleep by pouring chloroform into the bass horn while the members of the police band were practising. He gets all the wealth from the rich man's safe, and then starts a decidedly speedy Keystone chase.

Helen Holmes last week received the sad intelligence of the death of her father who resided in Chicago, and whom she had not seen for a number of months. Mr. Holmes was a railroad man practically all his life, beginning at the bottom and working up to one of the higher executive positions with the Great Northern Railway, and at the time of his death was traffic manager for the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railway. When a child Miss Holmes was constantly with her father, and to this association is due much of her success which she has made in railroad pictures since becoming a motion picture actress.

Giants Picked for "Whispering Smith"

Director J. P. McGowan has selected a cast of giants to appear in the principal parts of the ten-reel subject adapted from the Frank Spearman western railroad story, "Whispering Smith." Of the seventeen men in the cast, eleven are more than six feet in height and weigh from one hundred and ninety to two hundred and thirty pounds. The giants are: J. P. McGowan, F. M. Van Norman, Paul Hurst, Tom Lingham, N. Z. Woods, Leo Maloney, C. H. Wischusen, Sam Appel, J. C. Perkins, Ed. Roe and C. V. Wells.

This week Director McGowan purchased from the Southern Pacific Railway, twelve freight cars which will be used through several reels of the subject as rolling stock, and then serve in a gigantic railway wreck which will be the punch of one section of the feature. Another notable purchase for this story is that of office furniture at a Los Angeles second-hand store. After this was purchased, it was discovered from receipts in the drawers of one of the desks, that it was the same as used by the late Senator Dorsey when he amassed and lost several fortunes, each of more than one million.

Orrin Denny, head of the Signal Film Corporation laboratories, owing to the shortage of metol, heretofore considered a necessity for the best results in developing film, has been conducting a number of experiments, and now believes he has found a substitute in the combination of a number of other chemicals. Laboratory men say metol gives the round stereoscopic-like effect in the films, and it is considered indespensable. The substitute Mr. Denny has found, is said to be equally as good, and only a very experienced laboratory man can tell the difference direct from the film or when it is projected on the screen.

Sally Stirs Up Trouble

The E. & R. Company will next film "The Star's Dressing Room," from a scenario by Clem Pope. Scenes for this are laid around a vaudeville theatre where Sally and Napoleon as head-liners of the bill, observe the right of occupying the star's dressing room, much to the chagrin of the prima donna and an ingenue. To accommodate all players, one dressing room is divided by a screen which does not reach the floor, and about this gather all the male performers when the ingenue begins to dress. Finally Sally discovers her mate flirting with the blonde huzzy, and a riot follows. Lillian Brown Leighton, Ralph McComas and Lillian Hamilton appear in the principal parts.

A decidedly novel souvenir of the motion picture industry has been created in the form of a small camera mounted so it can easily be attached to the radiator cap of an automobile, and also on ash trays. This novelty named the Movie Mascot, was invented by Clarke Irvine, who is now engaged in manufacturing them. They are decidedly popular for auto decorations, and many members of the West Coast film colony are using them as such. The camera is a miniature reproduction of the professional camera, and is mounted on nickel-plated tripods.

The gigantic camera stand two hundred feet in height, so constructed that the platform may be raised or lowered one hundred feet, built especially for the making of scenes for the D. W. Griffith subject known as "The Mother and the Law," was put into use for the first time last week.

This stand was built to use in making the scenes that will include all of the sets erected to represent the Babylonian scenes. These settings, the largest ever constructed, extend over a space of ground approximately thirteen hundred feet long, and will give the camera a shot of that length. In the scenes, fully twenty-five hundred people took part.

The camera stand is built on movable trucks, and can be moved forward and back at the same time the upper platform is lowered or raised. Electrical equipment furnishes the power. The stand will enable Producer Griffith and his cameraman, Billy Bitzer, to secure some effects that are screen innovations which, coupled with these most remarkable settings that have become known as one of the seven wonders of California, will cause, no,doubt, much wonderment when this subject is given a public showing.

Director Otis Turner is away from University City on a vacation of several weeks, and during his absence the feature company will be directed by Jack Conway, late producer for the Fine Arts. Adaptation of the George Gibbs novel, "The Silent Battle," has been prepared by F. McGrew Willis, and this will be filmed by Mr. Conway. The story is one of the fight of a man against hereditary drink habits. Jack Kerrigan will appear in the star part, supported by Lois Wilson, Maude George and Harry Carter. The company will leave the first of the week to go to Arrowhead where Canadian woods camp scenes will be taken.

Clements Directs Louise Lovely

Roy Clements has been assigned to directing the feature company headed by Louise Lovely in the filming of "Bobby of the Ballet," which is an adaptation from a stage story by Ira Parks. While this is being made Joseph DeGrasse, who regularly directs Miss Lovely, is enjoying a vacation.

F. K. Myton, who for three and a half years was scenario writer for the Kalem Glendale Company, and since has served six months at the Lasky studio, has been added to the Universal scenario staff. Since coming here he has prepared three subjects, "The Little Brown Judge of Kildare," in five reels; "The Live One," in two reels, and "The Lamp," in two reels.

Number nineteen of the "Graft" series, by Walter Woods, and being produced by Richard Stanton, deals with the photo badger game in an attempt by shipbuilding lobbyists to intimidate a senator who has led the opposition against a bill favorable to them. Mayor Harding learns of the gang, and outwits them in their attempts.

Production of a five-reel subject was begun last week by Director Robert Leonard, who is also the author of the story and scenario, at "U" City. The title of this is "Ambrosia" and features Ella Hall in a child part. The girl becomes an orphan at a tender age, and is taken to the home of her aunt of wealth, which, although it contains every luxury, does not have any "love," and therefore a most despicable place for the child, who frequently runs away.

The son of a rich neighbor becomes her playmate, and when he later becomes the owner of a small automobile, the two are instrumental in bringing out the true nature of the young man who is to marry the aunt's daughter, when they pick up a woman who has been knocked down in the street by a machine and take her to the aunt's home. There she is confronted by the man-about-town who previously had been associated with her. The main cast includes Adele Farrington as the aunt, Betty Schade her daughter, Kingsley Benedict and Harry Bepp.

"The Hold-Up of the Harding Special" is a 101 Bison story being filmed by Henry McRae. The scenario is by Wright Roberts. An eastern railway magnate with his family comes to California, and while the father and mother are busy with social and business affairs, the nurse permits the daughter to play by the wharf where she falls asleep in a fisherman's boat.

The boat is far out to sea when the cat, which has been sleeping in the child's lap, dashes past the fisherman and he becomes frightened and jumps overboard. The boat drifts to a nearby island where, it, with the girl, falls into the hands of a gang of men who have been engaged in stealing sheep on the island. Fearing the child will tell of their whereabouts, they decide to keep it a prisoner, and do so until the ranchmen of the island raid their camp, when the girl is taken home by a rancher, thinking she is the daughter of one of the outlaws. There for fifteen years she makes her home.

In this time the ranchman has moved to the mainland, and there oil is discovered on his farm. This brings her real father to the land, and by means of an old photograph the parents of the girl are discovered. The hold-up referred to in the title takes place when the girl's lover learns she has been taken away on the train, and he with other cowboys stop the special and rush away to a minister where the couple are wedded. The members of the producing company are: E. N. Wallock, Lois White, Lee Hill, Marie Walcamp, L. C. Shumway and Mark Fenton.

Carleton Company Completes Subject

The Lloyd B. Carleton Company has just completed the filming of "Her Husband's Faith" with Emory Johnson, Dorothy Davenport, T. D. Krittenden and Frank E. Lee. It is the story of a woman living down her past life and becoming a wife and fond mother, when again she is confronted by a former associate in the underworld.

The heavy is about to expose the woman when his better self predominates at the sight of her happy child, and he leaves the home. This company will next take up the filming of "The Other Woman," story of which pertains to the musical world. Both of these subjects will consist of two reels. The scenario for the latter was adapted from the Saturday Evening Post, story by I. A. R. Wylie, and was prepared for the screen by Calder Johnstone.

Filming of a Memorial or Decoration Day picture has been taken up by Director George Cochran, and is entitled "Captain Billy's Comeback." The scenario is adapted from the Harry Leon Wilson story by Calder Johnstone. Thomas Jefferson is featured in this as the last surviving member of the G. A. R., and Mrs. George Hernandez as the last of the Ladies' Relief Corps. The locale is that of a small town where for years and years Captain "Billy" led the parade on Memorial Day, followed by the mayor, town clerk, city officials and members of the various lodges.

But the veterans of another war saw fit to change the program which had been the same year after year, and elected surviving veterans of the Spanish-American war to the post of marshal of the day. Uncle

"Billy" was heart-broken, and he remained indoors as the parade formed and went past. When there is considerable excitement he ventures out and learns a murderer has escaped from prison. A posse, composed of young veterans, is formed and start on the man-hunt. Uncle "Billy" accidently learns of the hiding place of the escaped convict, and lone-handed makes the arrest.

The Allen Curtis Joker Company has filmed "The Raffle for a Husband," wherein a pair of youths with room rent due, seek to raise funds by one acting as business manager and selling chances on the other, who is to become the husband of the girl who holds the lucky number. The scheme works well until the handsome prize falls in love with the village belle, and they have difficulty in arranging that she hold the correct coupon. The usual Joker cast appears in this.

Bold Bachelor Becomes Benedict

How a young bachelor attorney is induced to become a benedict when he is inclined to think seriously of what a fortune teller has read his palm to mean, is revealed in "An Assisted Destiny," being produced by the William Worthington-Universal Company from a story by Catherine Carr and a scenario which was prepared by Ben Cohn. Herbert Rawlinson appears in the part of the young bachelor, Agnes Vernon as the girl, and Jack Holt and Yona Landowska are the other principals.

Director William Bowman has produced "The Golden Boots," a one-reel comedy-drama from a scenario by Olga Printzlau for the Universal. The story pertains to a tramp who goes to a miser's house for food, and the wife to drive him away throws a shoe at him which is well filled with the savings of her miserly husband. The tramp discovers the roll, and after an exciting chase makes every one with whom he comes in contact happy by freely disposing of the easily acquired wealth.

Milton Hoffman, who has been general manager of the Peerless studio in the East, has been engaged by the Lasky Company in such a position, and has arrived at the West Coast producing plant. This will not alter the present force, as Cecil B. deMille will continue as director general and Fred Kley as business manager. Mr. Hoffman will greatly relieve both these men of many of the details connected with this big producing plant which every week is enlarged in one or more departments.

The Cecil B. deMille-Lasky subject, starring Marie Doro, entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn," has been completed, and the star and her husband, Elliott Dexter, are said to have taken up gardening at their Hollywood bungalow home.

The Robert Broadwell Company, of the Horsley producing staff, worked aboard trains all day Sunday in the making of scenes for "The Conscience of John David," starring Crane Wilbur. Two special trains were engaged for the day. One was made up of Pullman cars, and the other a freight train. The tracks between Los Angeles and Redondo were given the exclusive use of the company for the day. One of the last scenes to be made was that on top of a freight train where a hand-fight took place between Wilbur and a number of supposed tramps.

"Senta of the Valdt" is the title of a two-reel story being filmed by Director Charles Swickard, recently added to the Horsley staff. Scenes for this are laid in South Africa. Francis MacDonald appears as an English railway engineer, who on several occasions is instrumental in preventing a big land owner's daughter from injury and later of becoming the bride of a ne'er-do-well. At the same time he is trying to induce the land owner to make a just settlement with the railway company for lands damaged by tracks being built through them. Ultimately the railroad man is successful, and not only wins promotion, but also a bride. Marguerite Gibson appears as the land owner's daughter, and William Clifford as her father.

While making one of the last scenes for the East Indian story, first known as "Nadje's Sacrifice," title of which has been changed to "The Leopard's Bride," Marguerite Gibson was badly burned. The scene was that of a native girl permitting herself to be tied to a sacrifice altar in front of the native place of worship. A fire was built about her, and because of unusual smoke other players did not notice that her clothing had caught fire.

When carried from the stake she was in a semi-conscious condition, and the studio physican worked over her twenty minutes before she became fully conscious.

Gertrude Hoffman Guest of Von Klein's

Gertrude Hoffman and a number of her company, presenting "Sumurun" at a local theatre, were guests of General Manager B. H. Von Klein, of the Horsley studio, and Mrs. Von Klein, one day during the past week, and a special performance was given by the Bostock animals at the Horsley Jungle-Zoo.

Manager D. Whiting, Director Hal Roach and members of the Rolin Film Company's Lonesome Luke comedies producing staff, left the early part of last week for San Diego, where they are making exteriors for three or four pictures. Included in the list of players were Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, Sophia Clutts, Margaret Joslin, Harry Todd, Harry Pollard, Bud Jamison, Del Lampton, Sammie Brooks, May Cloy, Fred Newmyer and Charles Stevenson, all of which are now members of the Rolin stock, and make up one of the greatest comedy organizations of filmdom. Arrangements for use of exposition grounds, battleships of U. S. navy and other locations were previously completed.

The Kalem "Hazards of Helen" company is producing "The Human Telegraph" this week, and many of the scenes will be made around their new station built near Glendale. This has been named Kalem by the Salt Lake Railway officials. Helen Gibson stages another thrill for this by climbing out on a wire and dropping to the top of a locomotive and then notifying the train crew of a new band of crooks.

The William Beaudine Kalem Company is filming "Love and Burglars," wherein Ethel Teare, on a wager, becomes an amateur cracksman, and attempts to rob the home of Jack Mcdermott.

The Ham Kalem Company, under the direction of Harry Edwards, is filming "In Love," in which a fire hose plays a most important part, a full stream being utilized to raise little Bud Duncan through several floors of an apartment building. In the making of one scene, piano wire used broke and Bud fell the distance of about twenty feet, but like a rubber ball merely bounced and was not injured. Director Harry Edwards is permitting the company to use his new 1916 Winton in this picture.

The Kalem comedians and directors claim a record catch of fish as the result of a last Sunday excursion. The party did deep sea fishing off the San Pedro Harbor, returning with six yellow-tail weighing more than thirty pounds each, and about twenty-five sea bass.

Leonard Joins Kalem

Gus Leonard, veteran of the vaudeville stage, is a new member of the Kalem comedy company and will play with Ethel Teare and Jack Macdermott.

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE IN SCENES FROM "HIS WIFE'S MISTAKE" (Triangle-Keystone)

The ninth episode of "The Social Pirates" is being filmed this week by Director James Horne at the Kalem studio. This has been titled "The Missing Financier." The story deals with a millionaire who offers a great part of his fortune which has been made in munitions and the stock market, to charity. Much of the wealth was made by the man as the result of aid given him by the Social Pirates, Marion Sais and Ollie Kirkby, and they are handsomely rewarded for their part.

The usual cast appears in this. This two-reel episode required seventeen changes of wardrobe for Miss Sais. A remarkable set has been built for this number and rivals the gorgeous ones made for "The Mysteries of The Grand Hotel" serial, made at this studio.

The Pacific Film Laboratories have found the need of increasing their capacity, and additional printing machines have been added to take care of the additional work. The laboratory now contains two Angelus, two Freid, a Housman, a Williamson and a Bell and Howell automatic printers.

"The Floor Walker" is the title decided upon for the first Charles Chaplin Mutual release now being filmed at the studios of the Lone Star Film Corporation. The filming of this is going ahead very successfully, and the subject will be released in May.

Ben Turpin, late comedion with the Essanay Company, and Ed. Sedgwick, formerly with Universal, have been added to the stock company of the Vogue Film Corporation, and are doing their first work this week.

Director Jack Dillon has been filming "The Chinatown Villain," wherein a man of wealth offers a million for the suppression of opium smugglers, not knowing that his prospective son-in-law is the king of smugglers. Paddy Maguire plays the part of "Hop-head Joe," Jack Conley the smuggler, Arthur Moon the lover, Jack Gaines, secret service man, and E. J. Lowry the king of the smugglers. Rena Rogers appears as the daughter of the millionaire.

The unique discovery by a chemist of a love pill affords the plot for the Vogue comedy "Germanic Love." In this, two tramps discover a number of the pills and dispose of them freely to a number of girls, with a result that it becomes a free for all leap year party. Rube Miller is in charge of directing this, and the principals are Henry Keorman, Arthur Traverse, Madge Kirby and Alice Neilson.

Chester Roeder, manager of the "Girl and the Game" department of the San Francisco Mutual Exchange and part, and E. R. Finney manager of the Phoenix, Ariz., Mutual Exchange, spent several days of the past week here at Mutual studios, and were entertained by J. R. Krone, of the Vogue studios; George A. Hutchinson, of the Signal, and members of the Mutual exchange staff.

Many Western Leads in a "V"

The cast for the next Rollin S. Sturgeon Vitagraph subject has been selected and includes many of the leads of the western studios stock company, namely Nell Shipman, George Holt, William Duncan, Webster Campbell, Jack Mower, Anne Schafer and Corrine Griffith. This is an adaptation from the Cleveland Moffit story "Through the Wall," and will be completed in five reels.

Edgar Keller, artist-actor of the Vitagraph stock company, is producing a one-reel subject which will prove a decided novelty. The characters all take the part of posters from late fashion magazines with appropriate settings of backgrounds.

Director William Walbert has taken up the filming of the three-reel subject "Ashes," which was written by William E. Wing. Mary Anderson has been selected to play the lead in this. Other members have not been named.

Lee Moran last week won the championship in quoit-throwing at a contest held at Christie Nestor studio, in which every member of the staff took part. Moran was successful in defeating all opponents, his highest score being twenty-nine.

"Good Night, Nurse" is the one-reel Nestor comedy produced by Horace Davey, with a cast composed of Neil Burns as the clubman, Billie Rhodes as the receiving nurse, Stella Adams, Harry Rattenberry and Gus Alexander. It is while taking an injured man to the hospital that the clubman sees a beautiful nurse, and devises a way of becoming an inmate of the institution. This results unhappily, as he is assigned another—in fact a series of nurses—but none can quiet him. Finally, by a mere accident the receiving nurse becomes the one in charge of his case.

"Her Celluloid Hero" Is Not a Tragedy

Producer Al E. Christie is busy in filming "Her Celluloid Hero." The title refers to Eddie Lyons who appears as a motion picture actor who makes up for a part in imitation of a character he saw in the tenderloin district. The character proves to be a much-wanted second-story man, and the film actor is arrested when he is discovered by the police, but released in time to make his call on the screen-struck girl when the police nab the real criminal. Lee Moran appears in a character part in this, and the support is by Betty Compson, Gus Alexander and Ethel Lynn.

Members of the producing staff of the Active Motion Picture Company, of Chicago, arrived in Los Angeles last week and are making scenes for the series of "Our Country." One reel is being made in each state which shows the most noted scenic views. The project is headed by Judge Willis Brown, formerly of the Juvenile court of Salt Lake City.

Ruth Hampton is leading lady of the numerous romances which will be woven into every release. The company expects to make a thousand-foot subject in every state. They have completed the filming in Minnesota, Nevada, Northern California, and after finishing here will go to Arizona.

Director Alan Dwan has taken up the production of a story laid in Kentucky which features Lillian Gish. This has not been titled. and as parts of the scenario have not been definitely decided upon, no information has been given out.

The Fine Arts subject, which features Dorothy Gish as a reformer who was reformed, has been permanently named "Susan Rocks the Boat." This was written by Bernard McConville, and the direction was in charge of Paul Powell. Owen Moore appears in the leading male part, that of the true reformer who was successful in bringing about a reform.

"Playmates" is the title given to a Fine Arts subject now being filmed by the Franklyn Brothers, with Norma Talmadge in the featured part, supported by Ralph Lewis and Eugene Palette. The Fine Arts juvenile players will appear in this subject.

The coming Mae Marsh-Robert Harron Fine Arts picture, which was originally known as "The Little Apache," has been titled "A Child of the Paris Streets."

MAYO COMPLETING "JACKSTRAWS" AT LUBIN ON WEST COAST

San Diego, Cal., April 8.

Melvin Mayo is completing the filming of the three-reel drama, "Jackstraws," at the Lubin studio, and when he has made the last scene he will close his connection with the company and leave for Los Angeles. This drama is by Josie McLaughlin, the erstwhile stenographer for Capt. Wilbert Melville, who has just been advanced to the position of head of the scenario department.

The heavy is played by George Routh. Lucy Peyton takes the part of the girl, while Adelaide Bronti is the aunt. C. K. Van Auker, Alan Forrest and Evelyn Page are in the cast.

E. B. Jackson of Los Angeles, formerly with the Signal Company, has come down to the Lubin studio as property man, succeeding James Forney, who has gone to Los Angeles.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" has drawn big crowds at the Pickwick this week, closing tonight. Prices for this film attraction were put at twenty-five and fifty cents for evening, with twenty-five cents at matinee. Friday night the city and county officials were guests of the management.

Marguerite Fisher, Joseph Harris and other members of the Pollard Picture Plays Company are in Tijuana, Mexico, eighteen miles south of here, where some scenes are to be filmed for a nine-reel picture entitled "Pearl of Paradise." Mr. Harris will don the apparel of a matador and apear in the full-ring during a real bull-fight, while Miss Fisher will occupy a seat in the box and will toss the traditional red rose down to her lover in the arena in recognition of his success. Some films will also be made around the casino, the gambling tables, and that section of the Mexican town.

The Lubin studio staff at Coronado will begin work soon on a three-reel picture entitled "Jackstraws," with Melvin Mayo directing.

George Routh will play heavy, with Lucy Peyton as lead. Miss Peyton comes of the well known theatrical family of that name, and is a new accession at the Lubin studio.

Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Lubin studio, has just returned from Los Angeles, where he made large purchases of "properties" and looked over the field for new people for his company.

He states that he expects soon to form his second company, and in order to do the best work is planning to enlarge the stage to nearly twice its present capacity.

Ruth Saville has closed her engagement with the Lubin company and returned to Los Angeles.

From office stenographer to chief of the scenario department is an unusual step for the average young lady to make, and yet that has just been the experience of Josie McLaughlin of the Lubin staff.

She has been working on scenarios for some time as a side line, and several of her scripts have recently been produced under the direction of Melvin Mayo successfully.

Captain Melville believed it a shame that her talent should remain hidden in the sphere of shorthand expert and typewriter manipulator, and so determined to give her the important post to which she has just been advanced. Everyone about the studio is high in praise of her work.

Another interesting member of the Lubin company is Evelyn Page, who, until a few months ago, was the popular cashier at the Broadway theatre in this city. Manager Bush of that house lost a good attache, but the Lubin company was the gainer.

Several of the news film weeklies had representatives at the big auto race at the Panama California International Exposition to-day, when four of the prominnet racers were entered for a big prize, including Teddy Tetslaff, Bob Burman, Barney Oldfield and Cliff Durant.

The race was for fifty miles, over a 6,000-foot course, and was won by Burman.

Captain Wilbert Melville had some unusual experiences with his two yachts the past week, by reason of some very heavy winds which swept the coast. The Vergana was forced to run into the slip of a shipbuilding company at Long Beach, where she stuck in the mud until pulled off by a tug.

The Lucero, a smaller craft, was torn loose from her moorings near the San Diego Yacht Club and started on a cruise by herself across the bay.

Prompt work on the part of the club keeper and some sailors from the U. S. S. Milwaukee saved her from damage, and she was safely moored before she could batter herself out against a wharf.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

AS we go to press, Spring is crowding us hard. The stage door of the Winter Garden, half a block up the street, stands open most of the afternoon. Virginia Pearson expects to be bathing in cold cream before the end of the week. Kitty Gordon will soon be leaving off the furs which obscure so much of her back. Harry Reichenbach has almost quit beefing about the price of gasoline.

And they say that Ralph Dean is about to buy a new hat.

"Doc" Shallenberger has moved the Arrow Film offices up to the Times building at Broadway and Forty-second street. By so doing he is able to save sixteen cents in taxicab fare on every trip to Yonkers.

Out at the Lasky studios they announce that they have discovered a horse "entitled to the distinction of being known as a lens louse." Bless their hearts, there are many such.

Another despatch from the west says that a monkey escaped from the E. & R. Jungle studios, and for a whole afternoon had the entire police force of that part of the country busy. If this is Napoleon, he is well named.

Ever since that historic day when Arthur James reached down into his Webster and brought forth the word "cloquent," remarkable words have been applied to actors who play the heavy parts. It remains, however, for the Fox press department to reach the acme of description. This department refers to Stuart Holmes as "the cold, cruel, cunning, crafty, churlish, cloven-footed, caustic, calloused, cross, carking, curt, coarse, calculating villain." This beats us. We opened it, but we lay down our hand.

Clara Kimball Young has made a great success in pictures. She has received a proposal of marriage. It reads: "I'm a good Baptist, but even if you are an actress I am willing to marry you. I get twenty-two dollars a week, and see by the papers that you get $2,000. We could live very comfortable on $2,022. If interested, write me and I'll send picture."

Lying upon our circassian walnut desk at the moment is a little brochure entitled: "A Profitable Investment; prospectus of Adirondack Enterprises. About Motion Pictures, Poultry and Eggs, and other things that will make two dollars grow where but one dollar grew before." The cover also advises the reader that the booklet is "of interest to those who wish to invest in things that pay." On the last page of the booklet we are informed that "motion pictures are a gold mine." We have long suspected the truth of this, but we have had considerable difficulty in getting our ore out. Why we never thought of poultry and eggs as a side line is incomprehensible. The eggs would go so well with a number of actors we have in mind, and some of these eggs would screen so well.

Congress avenue, Flushing, Long Island, New York, looks like a tunnel under the undertaking district of Pittsburg, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. Crepe drips in long festoons from the age-old oaks, the grasshopper becomes a burden, and wailing is abroad in the land. And because why? says you. Our only explanation is found in the subjoined poem, entitled "The Passing of Oscar, the Vers-libre Fish," a carbon copy of which we have received from George Dubois Proctor, the genial and popular Gaumont scenario editor:

Oscar, our pet fish, has passed on.
Some days age he started his decline.
He grew quite puffy where his legs would sprout,
If he had any.
Father Trant, with care solicitous,
Moved him from his other three companions,
Into a tin bucket,
Nicely placed right where the radiator's
Gentle heat would soften the cold water's chill.
Trant even salted the water,
Hoping, perhaps, to stimulate his nerves,
If a fish has any,
Or perchance to waken memories of previous incarnations
In the briny deep.
But Oscar wouldn't stimulate;
He couldn't see much use in his bootless round,
Always swimming, swimming,
With the impenetrable barrier ever encircling him.
Was it of glass or was it of tin—it made no difference.
It was a barrier just the same.
And barriers are conspicuously crushing to the soul,
Even of a fish.

As Oscar's size increased,
Un-naturally,
So his spirit decreased,
Quite naturally.
He grew so listless.
Maybe the warm water proved debilitating,
And that brought him low.
But fish wives say the trouble lay deeper,
That his soul was stifled with him, crushed and dead.
For Oscar was made of sterner stuff.
His eight hundred and sixty-three bones were not planted there for nothing.
He longed to be a fish, untrammeled, free,
Such a one as men might look at and say,
"There was a fish who never feared a can."
But, being hemmed in by the inevitable,
He gave way to Fate.
One day he turned his white tummy up to the sky,
Gave his tail a final flap against the encircling tin
And thus he kicked the bucket.
Oscar, our pet fish, passed on.
Where to we cannot say.
But if there be a piscatorial Heaven,
A sort of fish Valhalla for the bolder spirits,
Oscar there now holds his court,
And knows nor glass nor tin.

"The Diary of Our Own Samuel Pepys."
(Music by F. P. A., of the New York Tribune.)

"April 7.—Up betimes this day, and to meet Harry Reichenbach, and go by his petrol buggy to the city, Harry discoursing pleasantly all the way of his prowess at the card game called poker, which it appeareth is very great. Harry also telling many tales of the Ford motor car, which tales I have long admired, yet did they divert Jack Clymer overmuch. Much ado this day for that I have brought a rose to the maiden at the telephone, yet did I bring none to her sister, who has become wroth with me. Thereupon did I promise to bring her one, and also one to her friend, a comely damsel called Miss Kreiger, yet her other name I know, no not at all; and Miss Kreiger, having, I misgive me, small faith in me, hath made a wager that I will forget the rose, which wager she hath won. So home from the office in much confusion."

"April 8.—This day did I venture into the offices of the Metro corporation, a vast place, and with many people hurrying this way and that. Saw also Arthur James, the persuader of editors, who telleth me that his journall, hight Metro Pictures Magazine, is to print each week 1,000,000 copies, which seemeth a mighty undertaking, but one at which I rejoice greatly, albeit Mr. James's enterprise is rewarded as it deserves. Hear also in these offices that Merritt Crawford is ill in his home, and with many others I am exceeding sorry thereat. Came to the office to-day Mistress Elaine Ivans, a damsel of much pulchritude, whom I have ofttimes admired in pictures. Home by train with Marshal Farnum, the producer of cinematograph pictures."

What have we done! Here we are now in the position of encouraging this matinee idol worship. Listen to this—the original letter is on file in this office, and will be shown to anyone genuinely interested:

"Anderson, Ind., March 8.

"Pierre Le May,
"New York, N. Y.

"Dear Mr. Le May:—Yes, another one of the hundreds and hundreds of your admirers. I might mention that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is responsible for my writing this letter. You know, physical attraction does wonders sometimes. It is the first thing that attracts one person to another.

"If you are NOT one of your fellow-players who depend on a secretary to keep up your correspondence for them, would it be worth while for you to answer this personally?

"Please (?)

"Yours sincerely,
"_____."

We owe it to the young woman who places the responsibility on us to give her name, but then, her folks might see it and take her out of school. Our only defense is that we didn't mean to do it.

We want to speak for a little space in Metro Pictures Magazine. If instead of using the same cut twice in the same issue, as per pages 6 and 10 of the April 8 number, our old friend Townsend Black would give us a little of that space, we could advertise ourself to an immense public. Come on, Duane, loosen up.

DRAMATIC MOMENTS IN "THE DUMB GIRL OF PORTICI," THE UNIVERSAL SPECTACLE WITH ANNA PAVLOWA

WILLIAMS WINS LATEST MAGAZINE POPULARITY CONTEST

Earle Williams, the Vitagraph leading man, and "The Christian" have been voted the most popular player and play of the day in a contest conducted by the Motion Picture Magazine. The vote ran into the thousands and came from all over the country.

EARLE WILLIAMS

The contest was close and not until the very end did the result seem evident. Williams jumped to the front on the closing day, it is said.

REVIER TAKES HIS "BAG OF TRICKS" TO POPULAR PLAYS AND PLAYERS

Harry Revier, new consulting director with the Popular Plays and Players, has been engaged to introduce and supervise novelties and tricks of the camera, and also to revise manuscripts before a feature is put into production.

Mr. Revier had extensive European experience before coming to America, and before joining the Metro staff was supervising director for Lasky, Universal, World, Gaumont and other companies. He has been in the business many years.

"Dumb Girl's" Premier in New York a Success

City Showed Interest in Picture Founded on Auber's Opera and Featuring Anna Pavlowa, Who Learned of Its Reception Over Long Distance to Salt Lake

"THE Dumb Girl of Portici," Universals spectacular production starring the noted dancer, Anna Pavlowa, was given its New York premier at the Globe Theatre, Monday, April 3. New York showed considerable interest on seeing a dancer in a role quite foreign to her profession and the week's box office receipts predict quite a run for the picture.

Mme. Pavlowa is supported by a competent cast of Universal western players as well as her own Ballet Russe. The last named body of artists perform some difficult and attractive figures a few times in the course of the picture's unwinding.

CARL LAEMMLE AND MAX RABINOFF TALKING FROM UNIVERSAL HEADQUARTERS IN NEW YORK TO MLLE. PAVLOWA IN SALT LAKE CITY

The star herself renders few complete dancing numbers except in the prologue and epilogue which are entirely apart from the pictured version of the opera. She dances several times on the seashore, and throughout the tragic piece her movements are rhythmic and easy.

Max Rabinoff, of the Boston Grand Opera Company, with whose permission the Universal company made the spectacle, was present at the opening as the guest of Carl Laemmle, president of the film company. After the performance Mr. Rabinoff and Mr. Laemmle conversed with Pavlowa over long-distance telephone, and acquainted her with the success of the picture. Pavlowa's engagement in Salt Lake City, Utah, prevented her personal appearance at the Globe, and as a result the telephone was brought into use.

Many other officials of the Universal company were present at the opening as well as some of the stars of the eastern Universal studios. The audience was enthusiastic throughout and applauded some of the mob scenes introduced from time to time.

Made at Universal City, Cal., "The Dumb Girl of Portici," based on Auber's opera, is chiefly spectacle. Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, who produced it, have paid minute attention to elaborate settings and realistic mob scenes. These scenes are handled to striking effect and form the most notable points of the production. MOTION PICTURE NEWS reviewed the film at length when it was first exhibited on the coast.

The supporting cast, which includes as its leads Rupert Julian, Douglas Gerrard, John Holt, Edna Maison, Wadsworth Harris and Hart Hoxie, is most efficient. Mr. Julian as Masaniello, guardian of the dumb girl, renders one of the best performances of his career.

Essentially a tragedy, "The Dumb Girl of Portici" is unusually gruesome in some of its phases. It is powerful, and with its excellent cast and fine atmosphere should prove a valuable box offive attraction, considering, too, the esteem in which Mme. Pavlowa is held.

Before this main feature at the Globe, a most entertaining scenic was exhibited, "Scaling the Jungfrau."

MONTGOMERY IS MADE MANAGER FOR WORLD IN INDIANAPOLIS

G. N. Montgomery, who has been connected with the Indianapolis branch of the World Film Corporation for the last six months, has been appointed manager of the Indianapolis office, succeeding W. A. Ratz.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

PRESIDENT WILSON MAY SEE KELLERMANN FILM AT PRIVATE SHOWING IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

ACTIVITIES in the Washington, D. C., offices of the Fox Film Corporation have taken a rise in temperature recently, and Manager C. F. Senning, one of the most conservative speaking men in the territory, waxes quite talkative.

A new man has been added to the force in the person of Geo. Smiley, who will operate throughout the entire territory to ascertain the needs of the important centers, the condition of the motion picture industry and to make stronger the Fox films. Mr. Smiley is capable of filling such a difficult and responsible position as he has had previous training as an exchangeman and roadman under Pathé, Electric Supply Company, and states rights features.

He is well known and liked throughout the East. He brings his commission direct from the Fox offices of New York, which stamps Mr. Smiley as well equipped for his new post.

C. L. Worthington, district manager of the Eastern division of the Fox Film Cororation, made a visit recently to the local offices and expressed himself as highly satisfied with conditions. He and Mr. Smiley will be closely associated.

Allen Moritz, roadman for Fox, has returned from the South and reports conditions fair. He has been among the southern exhibitors for a month. He says this condition is due to the Lenten season and seasonal business changes. Baltimore is especially quiet in general theatre business, but this city has the additional causes of the continuous run of the "Birth of a Nation" and the religious excitement caused by the meetings of Billy Sunday.

Among the recent visitors to the local Fox Exchange were Ernest Westfield, of the Maryland, of Hagerstown, Md.; Col. R. G. Allen, of Raleigh, N. C., a well known banker of the South, who operates the Superba, the newest house of that city; Harry Bernstein, of the Wells circuit of theatres, and Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va.

After spending three weeks auditing the books of the Washington Fox exchange, J. H. Sharbut left for the home office with a most flattering report of the Washington offices. He highly complimented Mr. Senning and his assistants on the system and efficiency maintained, which enabled him to gather facts quickly and accurately.

Goldie Stein, formerly of the United Exchange, has been added to the force of the Fox offices, to assist Mary Jeffries in the booking department.

Superintendent Woods of the Capitol has arranged for frequent exhibition of Fox pictures for the members of congress and their families. A well equipped projection room has been installed in the halls of Congress, which furnishes not only the exhibition of films of national and governmental importance, but also has become an auditorium of recreation which has given the congressional folks and their families an opportunity of becoming familiar with the advancements and productions of the industry. All exhibitions are under the direction of Superintendent Woods.

Arrangements have been made for a private showing of the Fox Million Dollar Annette Kellermann picture before the National Press of that city as soon as the production is ready for exhibition. This will be entirely by invitation and there is every reason to believe that the President and Mrs. Wilson will be present as the guests of honor.

BRINCH LEARNS OF GOOD BUSINESS FOR TRIANGLE IN KANSAS CITY

P. N. Brinch, traveling representative of the Triangle Film Corporation, was a visitor at the Kansas City exchange last week, having crossed the state from St. Louis.

Mr. Brinch has found fine reports of Triangle business, and declared that the enterprise was going even better than had been anticipated. "It's five months old, and there is no healthier baby anywhere," he said.

"Of course, the quality of our service counts for much," he said. And then he mentioned what he considered a vital element in success.

"The character of the representatives means a great deal, too. If the exhibitors have confidence in the representative, if he is the kind of man whose word is always good, and his advice valuable, the business will build up strongly and quickly."

BLUEBIRD SALES LARGE IN KANSAS CITY; HALL MAKES QUICK TRIPS WITH WAR FILM

GEORGE BOWLES, connected with the Bluebird photoplays in Kansas City, reports remarkable success with those pictures. The newest theatre there—the Auditorium—has contracted for Bluebirds, while seven of the largest suburban houses have declared for the same service.

Mr. Bowles announces much activity in that company's office. The weekly prize contest which they have instituted for the salesman turning in the largest number of contracts was given to W. B. Emrich. A new road man, known as Special Utility Agent, has been added to the Bluebird force. He is H. J. Rosenberg, formerly with the St. Louis office of the same company.

Betty Jane Balsley is the name of a new baby daughter of whom Lee Balsley, advertising manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Company, is constantly talking. Owing to the arrival of this maiden, Mr. Balsley has been away from his desk for a part of a week.

The Kansas City office of the Pathé Exchange was recently visited by two managers of the same film company. L. A. Sheriden, now in charge of the Des Moines office and formerly in Kansas City, and C. S. Edwards, head of the St. Louis exchange, were the two noted visitors.

C. A. ("Red") Jones, traveler for the Universal Film Company, won the monthly contest held by the Kansas City office of that company for the salesman getting the most business. The twenty-five dollar prize which Mr. Jones won is the second he has obtained in the last three months, so his ability as a worker is apparent.

A recent visitor to the local office of the Kansas City Feature Film Company was Mrs. Ida M. Waldron, manager of the Wonderland Theatre at Hastings, Nebr. Kansas City exchange men are often favored with visitors from Kansas and Missouri, but for a Nebraska patron to go to Kansas City on a business trip is rather a novelty.

A. A. Chatkin, manager of the Kansas City branch of the United Film Service, is expecting to meet some old friends when he goes to Chicago to attend the wedding of his brother, D. J. Chatkin, general manager and vice-president of the same company. On this trip, which will take him out of the office for over a week, Mr. Chatkin will be present at a gathering of the branch exchange managers of the United Film Service.

P. J. Hall, of the Western Film and Supply Company, is at present in Kansas with a war film, making one-night stands. The report that he was moving his Kansas City office to Oklahoma City, Mr. Hall wishes denied. He went to that place to look over the field, but decided that the territory was not yet ripe, so did not locate there. However, should he decide to open a branch in Oklahoma City, he will by no means discontinue the Kansas City office, which he says is doing a big business.

O'BRIEN TAKES ORDERS FOR UNITED IN VERMONT AND NEW HAMPSHIRE

William F. O'Brien, of United, Springfield, Mass., has been through Vermont and New Hampshire booking its twenty-one-reel service of single and double-reel subjects only.

THE fountain of motion picture news in New Orleans was in the office of the Fox Film Corporation this week.

Successively it was announced that a new southern district manager had been appointed; that Fox service was being pushed to include cities in which it has never been planted; and that a company of Fox players, probably headed by Theda Bara, would go to New Orleans for scenes in a coming production.

C. W. Harden, formerly of the Kansas City office of Fox, is the new Southern division head. He supplants Sam Dembow, Jr., who, it is announced, leaves the company. The office force remains the same.

A telegram from Lloyd D. Willis, assistant manager in New York to R. E. Barron, New Orleans manager, stated that the Fox Film Corporation contemplated sending a company of players to New Orleans, and inquired as to weather conditions. Particularly, the telegram asked the condition of the foliage there.

So far as could be learned, the answer said the weather was just about as good as could be wanted for the making of pictures; nobody questions the foreign "atmosphere."

Just to show how far the New Orleans Association of Commerce is willing to cooperate with and welcome picture companies there, they had a man on the job as soon as they got wind of the Fox telegram. The result was that a complete weather chart from the weather bureau and additional data about the city was forwarded to New York by return mail.

Fox service went last week into the Louisiana theatre, owned by P. E. Coe in Baton Rouge, the state capital. Baton Rouge was heretofore the only large city South without a Fox exhibitor. Manager Barron reports contracts also from the following theatres:

Princess, Ruston, La.; Temple, Aberdeen, Miss.; Majestic, Greenboro, Ala.; Princess, Natchez, Miss.; Amusu, Natchitoches, La.; the Opera House, Lake Providence; Crown, Biloxi, Miss., and in the Arcade and Isis at Lake Charles, La., recently taken over by Wachsenand Miller from the Pearce syndicate.

"That's not all the story," said Manager Barron. "I have just received word from the New York office that Theda Bara is coming out in the most daring release yet. The name of the release is of course confidential as yet, but will be announced shortly."

This week the New Orleans office of Metro starts in as a releasing office, otherwise termed a "buying" office. This is due to a greater demand for Metro productions in the territory, and to the energy of the present manager, Karl A. Bugbee. "The Wall Between," starring Francis X. Bushman, is the first Metro release that was sold "out of the can."

Maurice F. Barr, the Bluebird manager, went out of town last week, and landed a half dozen Bluebird contracts. He lined up New Iberia, Lafayette and De Ridder, La., put Bluebirds in the Brimstone theatre at Sulphur, La., and, for the first time in the history of the South, induced the Y. M. C. A. to believe that feature motion pictures should be a part of their educational curriculum. This happened in Bon Ami, La., where the Y. M. C. A. is the rendezvous for several hundred laborers.

World Film is going to inaugurate a nation-wide advertising campaign early in May, according to Manager Ross Hardenbrook, of the New Orleans office. The fireworks start off in the Saturday Evening Post with a double page advertisement.

Mr. Hardenbrook rushed over to Memphis, Tenn., during the week, in which city he visited Felix F. Feist, sales manager for the World, who is making a tour of the exchanges for his company. Mr. Feist had New Orleans on his list, but was suddenly called to the home office before getting here.

Important innovations having to do with the selling end of their business, will follow in Southern exchanges of General Film, folowing a trip last week to Memphis by H. G. Morrow, manager of the New Orleans headquarters.

Mr. Morrow said that the business of the New Orleans and Memphis offices was growing so fast that a new selling arrangement for the two offices was badly needed.

Memphis also claimed S. T. Stephens, manager of the Mutual, last week, who paid that city a short visit in connection with business for his company.

The Paramount office reports that it is oversold. So much of a demand has been created for Paramount pictures through the immense advertising they received at the Crescent theatre, that a stringent zone system was adopted for the theatres of New Orleans desiring the service. J. Eugene Pearce, he of the Pearce syndicate, has secured first and second run rights for the Trianon and Tudor theatres, while a number of suburban exhibitors will use the extremely popular films after he is done. The situation is such, said Manager H. F. Wilkes, that a new contract is already applied by a competitor in districts in which Paramount service has already been sold.

What Al. G. Shear says about patent screens, particularly the brands he carries, certainly is worth a paragraph. Mr. Shear is an exhibitor, an exchange man, a supply man, ticket-taker if need be, and has been elected for life to the position of T. O. E. B. H. I. N. O. (Toastmaster of every banquet held in New Orleans). This is what he says:

"Since the first of the year, this office (the Consolidated Film) has sold more patent screens than during the eight years I have been in motion pictures. And if that isn't going some, I pass the buck to the next one. Nowadays there is a big demand in this territory for the right brand of patent screen."

Triangle films, already assured of tremendous popularity through the missionary efforts of Ernst Boehringer, the exhibitor who introduced them to New Orleans, are going even stronger with the opening of the Triangle Film Corporation at 340 Carondelet street, under the management of Nat Ehrlich, old New Orleans exchange man. In addition to the several theatres using the Triangle program, the following have been added: The Isis, 1515 Dryades street; The Famous, Marigny and Claiborne streets, and The Folly, in Algiers.

The United Program Film Service retired from the New Orleans field several weeks ago. The Peerless Feature Film Company, which occupied offices with the former concern, also has retired from the field, and this week their joint offices at 832 Common street are for rent.

SHERRY BRANCH IN BUFFALO, N. Y., GETS HOUSE-WARMING

THE formal opening of the Buffalo, N. Y., branch of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company took place April 3 at 145 Franklin street. Manager Daniel J. Savage was the recipient of many beautiful floral offerings from Buffalo film men. One of the distinguished players who attended the opening was Anna Held, who has been posing in Paramount Pictures and who is at Shea's this week.

The offices have been beautifully furnished and fully equipped for the large business which will surely come to the branch under the management of Mr. Savage, one of the veterans of the film industry. He managed the Mutual and General Film offices in that city for many years.

Numerous exhibitors from surrounding towns were present. A dinner was given for the employes of the branch at the Iroquois at 8:30 P. M., with William L. Sherry and Manager Savage as the principal speakers.

Among those who were present at the reception in the afternoon were: W. A. V. Mack, General Film; Henry Carr, Shea's theatre; F. J. Leonard, Chicago representative of "Strange Case of Mary Page;" I. M. Mosher, manager, Palace theatre; Mr. Murett, Eastwood theatre; Mr. Babcock, Lyric theatre, Wellsville; H. E. Benedict, General; Mr. Baird, Universal; Mr. Savage, Como theatre; Mr. Persons, Canandaigua, N. Y.; Mr. Kurtz, Rochester; George Hall, Maxine theatre, Albert Becker, J. L. Mulhausen, World; F. S. Hopkins, A. A. Schmidt and A. Young, Universal; C. A. Taylor, Metro; Edward Hayes, General; C. Christoffers and C. Brandon, Mutual; N. I. Filkins and James K. Morgan, Pathe; Harry Marsey and J. M. Sitterly, Popular; Jack Farren, Victoria, Rochester; J. A. Schuchert, United Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.; Michael Shea; Harold Edel, manager, the Strand; Anna Held and Ruth Johnson.

THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

NOT only is the Universal Program the greatest program on earth in point of variety, class, and in being kept up to the very highest standard—but it has the largest following of movie fans by a majority of millions. It is the one most popular program, and as such it is the basis of success of thousands upon thousands of Exhibitors who were wise enough to arrange for its sterling service. Week after week the greatest stars, the best plays, the most thrilling punches, the most magnificent sets, the very finest achievement in program releases are presented to millions who are so loyal to their Universal favorites as to make their patronage assured to the Exhibitor with the least effort on his part. If you CAN get the Universal Program, grab it quick. If you cannot, watch for the first opportunity to tie up to this sure winner WHEN YOU CAN.

Hobart Bosworth in "Dr. Neighbor." With Dorothy Davenport and an exceptional cast. Fourteenth Red Feather Release. A most unusual problem play. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released May 1. The wonderful Scriptural story of the good Samaritan is first told to us in a most beautiful prologue, and brought down to the present, linked to the dramatic story of "Dr. Neighbor" in the most telling manner. As the story unfolds we are brought face to face with the problem which at some time confronts every sympathetic physician: "Shall I mercifully end the life of this hopeless sufferer and end her agony of pain?" No less an actor than Hobart Bosworth could have essayed the part of the doctor. No producer other than the Universal could have produced this remarkable picture with the sincerity and sympathy, the realistic detail and the general all-round bigness that marks this superb Red Feather production.

"The Purple Maze." With Stella Razeto, Juan De La Cruz, and Gladys Brockwell, Two-Reel Gold Seal Emotional Drama. Directed by Ed J. LeSaint. Released May 2. Two beautiful girls, fond of fun, of fluffy ruffles and other feminine fripperies, are introduced in this "easiest way" story in a manner to grip the interest from the first flash on the screen. How one choses the broad and gayly lighted road that leads to destruction, and the other is saved by a great love makes an unusual and intensely dramatic photo play.

Mary Fuller in "The Girl Who Feared Daylight." With a Brilliant Supporting Cast. Two-Reel Victor Romantic Drama. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released May 3. Mary's uncle wishes to get control of her fortune. Part of his plot was to make Mary believe that if she exposed her eyes to the light of day she would be stricken blind. Yet, while Love is said to be blind, it was little Dan Cupid who opened her eyes to the truth. This fine play is further evidence of the superiority of Universal Program features.

"The Beloved Liar." With Thomas Jefferson and Zoe Bech. Three-Reel Laemmle Heart Interest Drama. Directed by George Cochrane. Released May 4. Surely the spirit of the beloved Joe Jefferson still lives in the quaint and lovable characterizations of his talented son who plays the lead in this heart-throbbing drama. As an old violinist who loses the script of an opera he has written, later to come into fame and fortune when it is found and produced without his knowledge, this marvelous character actor in this beautiful production adds lustre to the incomparable Universal Program. A photo drama that will please all your patrons.

"Lem's College Career." With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Betty Compson. Two-Reel Nestor Comedy. Directed by Al. Christie. Released May 5. When this bunch of Nestor comedians get together look out for the cleanest, most wholesome and funniest comedy stuff that you can possibly hand to your patrons. Eddie had a cinch on Betty's affections until Lee, the giddy college boy appeared. After that, he had to take a college course to win her—for keeps. And the amount of fun these clever people extract from the story will set your audiences a roaring with laughter.

"The Leap." With Lee Hill and Rene Rogers. Two-Reel 101-Bison Railroad Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. Released May 6. Another smashing big railroad picture with a splendid plot, swift action, novel situations, tremendous scenes and a most unusual climax. Two lovers, the son and daughter of rival railroad presidents, baffle their fathers' enemies, and bring about a true friendship between their parents who have been fighting each other for years. Lee after a quarrel with his father becomes an engineer on a western railroad. He saves a runaway express train and the lives of its passengers by a daring leap from telegraph wires to the top of the flying cars. One of the most spectacular scenes ever shown in pictures. More evidence of the bigness of the Universal Program on which this great picture appears as a regular release.

"The Marriage of Arthur." With Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson. Two-Reel Laemmle Society Drama. Directed by Rupert Julian. Released May 7. Arthur thought pretty well of himself and when his uncle left him a fortune on condition that he marry Agatha, he believed it a terrible sacrifice. He neglected her for other charmers, and it wasn't until she began playing the same game that he realized that she was as attractive to him as she proved to be to other men. There's a snap and go to this picture, and some very handsome sets that mark it as unusual even for the mighty Universal Program.

FOX MAKES YEARLY CONTRACTS WITH 4 QUAKER CITY THEATRES; 6 CHAPLIN PRINTS READY

THE Philadelphia office of the Fox Film Corporation has completed yearly contracts with four of the largest vaudeville houses in the city for the exclusive showing of Fox Features.

The Broadway in the southern section, Keith's Alleghany in the northern part of the city, Nixon's theatre in West Philadelphia, and the Colonial in Germantown are the four houses. Each feature is run one week.

The late releases of the Fox studios, the "Bondman" and "Gold and the Woman," are very much the vogue in that territory at present.

"Blue Blood and Red," about to be released, enjoys the unique distinction of passing the censors without a single cut.

All the dwellers in the World offices are jubilating over the fact that in the latest contest for office business, the Philadelphia branch stood number one, as announced in the "Bulletin" of March 25. This standing was gained in competition with the whole country. At the last test this office stood third. Since the installation of Harvey Day as manager, the Quaker City business has increased to such an extent larger quarters are an absolute necessity. Plans have been completed by which a large addition to the present building can be arranged. Efficient assistants to Mr. Day are: J. M. Flynn, assistant manager; Allen May, city salesman; E. W. Booth and J. A. Evans, roadmen.

One of the first features of J. W. Pope's accession to the managership of the Mutual offices was the calling of a sales conference with branch managers Campbell, of the Harrisburg office, and Rippard, of the Wilkes-Barre offices; also representatives Pierce, Safron and Morrissey, of the Philadelphia branch.

The territory has six Chaplin-Mutual prints engaged for the first release announced for the 15th of May, and more will have to be ordered to supply the growing demand, although the name of the picture is not known. It is moreover booked solid for three weeks. There will be a simultaneous showing at the most important houses, not an exclusive first run by any theatre.

Marcus and Newman have decided to operate the booking films part of their exchange under the name of the Premier Booking Company. The Eastern Booking Office branch will be devoted to states rights releases. Five more theatres have been added in the past week to the Premier's list of contracts. In spite of persistent rumors to the contrary, the members of this firm declare emphatically they have no connection in any way with any other booking company. Jean Marcus and Louis Newman are the sole proprietors of the new concern.

The Empire Film Exchange, of which M. S. Kahnweiler is manager, has moved from 1220 to 1223 Vine street. The new quarters are much larger than the old, necessitated by the increasing business of the exchange which carries motion picture supplies as well as films.

Situated in the same building is the Victor Film Company, of which Victor Prince is proprietor. This is a new exchange to Philadelphia, Mr. Prince having been previously located in New York City.

Solomon Brilliant, general manager of the Brilliant Manufacturing Company situated at Fort Lee, New Jersey, has been visiting Philadelphia exchanges during the week in the interest of his firm. During his Quaker City sojourn Mr. Brilliant has been stopping at the Ritz-Carlton.

Another exchange, and a big one, is about to be added to Philadelphia's film row on Vine street. The International Film Service, some of whose plans were announced in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is taking the Quaker City as one of its branches. Earl Schweigert, at present assistant manager of Pathé, will be the manager of the Philadelphia office. The entire building in Vine is reported to have been leased by the new exchange for its Philadelphia offices.

The New Film Corporation which now occupies this building will probably move to 1339 Vine street.

G. H. Atwood, former manager of the Pathé office in Philadelphia, has left for Los Angeles, where he will become manager of the International Film Service in that city. This appointment fulfills a long cherished desire of Mr. Atwood to settle in California.

Pathé's "Iron Claw" and "Little Mary Sunshine" are the two most popular subjects in that office's repertoire at the moment. As the former was hacked and the latter hailed by the Board of Censors it goes to show that Philadelphians are getting their knowledge of pictures from their own observation and are not letting the censors form any judgments about photoplays for them.

CRAFTS NO LONGER A TRIANGLE FRANCHISE HOLDER IN DETROIT

The Triangle Film Corporation has replaced P. P. Craft in charge of Triangle films in Detroit, Mich. Mr. Craft is no longer an authorized franchise holder of Triangle films.

Until such time as the Triangle Film Corporation decides as to whether it will sell a Detroit franchise or open a branch office, it will have an office at 900 Union Trust building in charge of L. W. Foster, of the New York office.

The whereabouts of P. P. Craft is not known.

CHATKIN INSTALLS RENOVATING PLANT

A. A. Chatkin, manager of the Kansas City office of the United Film Service, has installed a new renovating plant, and is having the inspection department enlarged.

He is now preparing for a trip to Chicago to attend the marriage of his brother, D. J. Chatkin, vice-president and general manager of the same company.

It is probable that while in that city the Kansas City manager will be given future plans for the improvement of the Kansas City territory.

WORLD IN CAPITAL CITY IN FRONT RANKS OF EXCHANGES

Washington, D. C., feels proud that Henry Friedman, roadman for the exchange of the World Film Corporation there, leads the list in the contest among the inner circles of the World exchanges for the greatest number of contracts secured.

The Washington office has made wonderful strides in the last half year, and now stands in the front rank. Manager C. W. Bunn is what might be termed a quiet hustler. He just forges away in a business-like manner, and gets the business.

LOWER END OF GOLDEN GATE AVENUE IS BECOMING UPPER END OF FRISCO'S FILM BUSINESS

THE lower end of Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, which recently took on the appropriate name of Film Row, is growing rapidly and is now the film exchange center of the city. The International Film Service, the film distributing end of the Hearst interests, has leased a store at 280 Golden Gate avenue and an exchange will be opened there as soon as carpenters and vault builders can complete the necessary work.

The first release will be made during the third week in April and will consist of the first episodes of a serial and a weekly. This branch will be in charge of H. L. Knappen, until recently manager of the Atlanta branch of the Pathe Exchange, who recently arrived in San Francisco.

The General Film Company will soon be in its fine new building on Golden Gate avenue, just above Leavenworth. A one-story fireproof building has been erected on a corner lot and this is being fitted with every modern device for the handling of film and the transaction of an exchange business.

District Manager H. H. Hicks has been giving the construction and furnishing of this business his personal attention and has been attending to the duties of the San Francisco manager since the resignation of Leon Bories some weeks ago.

In addition to these firms the American Photo Player Sales Company is preparing to move to Golden Gate avenue in a short time, having leased the second floor of a large building at Jones street and Golden Gate avenue, the ground floor of which is occupied by the California Film Exchange, G. A. Metcalfe, the Triangle Film Corporation, the Fox Film Corporation and the Metro Pictures Corporation. Several other concerns in this business are planning to move to Film Row.

"MUTT'S TOOTHACHE" STOLEN

"Mutt's Toothache," the first "Mutt and Jeff" release, was evidently stolen in transit between the Cleveland and Cincinnati offices of the Standard Film service of Cincinnati. Only the empty film case arrived. The Standard is investigating.

MUTUAL EXCHANGE IN PORTLAND, ME., WILL BE MOVED TO BANGOR; SUMMER OUTLOOK GOOD

R. F. BORROTO, of New York, is in Bangor, Me., making preparation for the establishment of the Mutual Film Exchange there, of which he will be the manager. This branch was formerly situated in Portland and was under the management of W. C. Green. Mr. Borroto was lately connected with the Boston branch of the same company.

Bangor is better located than Portland as a distributing center, and the express expenses will be less for the company as a result of the removal. From Bangor Mr. Borroto says he can handle all the territory around Portland as well as the eastern part of the state, and still not be far from Aroostook County points. Aroostook County is in the northern part of the state, and there are several motion picture theatres there.

This company furnishes films to exhibitors all over the state, and its addition to the three exchanges, the Universal, managed by Charles M. Stern; the General, managed by George A. Newhall, and the United, managed by W. H. Brennan; already established in Bangor, makes Bangor the largest distributing center in the state. The Paramount company has an office in Portland.

The motion picture business in the state picked up wonderfully during the past month, and Charles M. Stern, who has just returned from a trip to the western section of the state, says that the summer season will find the business far better than that of a year ago.

The summer resorts are planning to use more pictures than formerly, although in consideration of the fact that the films cannot be shipped on water craft carrying passengers, the expenses of shipping the films by express is greater than formerly.

Mr. Stern has just completed arrangements by which he will furnish W. C. Benson, of the Green theatre in Houlton, with Universal pictures. Mr. Stern is now on a trip through the eastern part of the state, including visits to Eastport, Machias and Calais.

MANY NEW ENGLAND HOUSES BOOK TRIANGLE; SHAPIRO IN WHITE MOUNTAINS FOR FOX

MANAGER W. H. BRADLEY, of the Boston office of the Triangle Film Company, is showing the new exhibition room at the Melrose street plant. It has a built-in booth and is as well fitted as the rest of the establishment, which is notable in that regard.

The Triangle is booking Billie Burke's first picture in that territory and is getting repeats.

The new Strand theatre at Brockton opened last week with Billie Burke in "Peggy."

Among the houses that have booked Triangle service in the last two weeks are the Orpheum, Somerville; the Eagle and the Roxbury, Roxbury; the Alston theatre, Alston; the Princess, Brattleboro, and the Opera house, Middlebury, Vt.; the Princess, Bridgewater, Mass.; the Bijou, St. Johnsbury, Vt.; the Colonial, Andover; the Lyceum, Marblehead, Mass.; the Nashua, Nashua, N. H.; the Orpheum, Concord, N. H.; the Orpheum, Turner's Falls; the Medford, Medford; the Melrose, Melrose, and the Old Colonial, Plymouth, Mass.

Edward Farrell, for some time in charge of General Film interests in Boston, who has been managing that company's southern territory, will return to Boston April 10.

William Shapiro, road manager of the Fox Company, is making his annual trip through the White Mountains and Vermont to sign up the summer business in that region.

Carl Crawford, representing Fox in the Boston district for years, and later located in Toronto, has been appointed manager of the new Fox office recently opened in St. John, N. B.

TRIANGLE EXCHANGE ESTABLISHED IN NEW ORLEANS; CITY BECOMING SOUTHERN SUPPLY CENTER

THE first of the month ushered the entrance of the Triangle program through the establishment of a Triangle exchange in New Orleans, which puts that city on a par with larger cities through the fact that every large program has local headquarters in that city.

S. T. Stephens has just returned from Mobile, where he put Mutual service into five houses in that city.

Meyer Simmonds, lately manager of the Winik-Brock Company in Panama, and formerly associated with the United Program, is back in New Orleans. Mr. Simmonds expects to make a new connection shortly. His brother, Joseph Simmonds, left New York recently to open a London, England, selling agency for World and Equitable features.

Herman Fichtenberg is spending $200,000 on his theatre in Canal street, his first heavy theatre investment in the city. He has sent General Manager W. H. Gueringer on a tour of northern and eastern cities to gather ideas which will be incorporated into the new house.

An exhibitor went all the way from Orange, Texas, recently, to purchase supplies from the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, which leads to the natural assumption that New Orleans will soon be the distributing point for the gulf states.

CANADIAN "U" TAKES ON TWO ROADMEN

The Canadian Universal Film Company, of Toronto, reports that in anticipation of big business starting this spring, with its new features and serials, it has decided to increase its staff of roadmen by two.

DUSTIN OPENS ST. LOUIS BRANCH OF INTERNATIONAL

E. W. Dustin, former manager of the World Film Exchange in St. Louis, has opened a branch of the International News Service in the Plaza building on Olive street. Mr. Dustin is an experienced film man, having held positions in almost every department of the industry.

He has been at different times theatre manager, director and producer of films, and lately exchange manager. The International Office, owing to the triangular shape of the building, has two entrances, one on Olive street, 3315, and the other just opposite, on Lindell avenue. The Triangle offices are on the second floor of the same building, and the Pathé exchange is just around the corner on Locust street.

The chief topic of conversation at the Triangle Film Exchange, in the Plaza Building, is the little daughter who has lately arrived at the home of Floyd Lewis, manager of the exchange.

FOX OPENS OFFICE AT ST. JOHN, NEW BRUNSWICK

The Fox Film Corporation has opened a new branch office at St. John, New Brunswick, and from there will cover the maritime provinces of Canada—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. This office is located in the British Bank of North America Building, and is in charge of C. M. Crawford, as branch manager.

The William Fox service already has been inaugurated, and at the introduction the Fox stars received an ovation. L. T. Rogers, in charge of the Canadian territory for the Fox organization, was present for the opening.

Within a few weeks additional branch offices will be opened in Western Canadian cities, in British Columbia and the middle provinces.

THIRTY EXCHANGE GUESTS AT KANSAS DINNER

Nearly thirty of the exchange men of Kansas City and their wives attended a banquet held at the Baltimore Hotel there recently. The occasion was a parting dinner for W. O. Edmonds and Charles W. Harden. Mr. Edmonds was for some time the Kansas City manager of the George Kleine pictures, but is now handling the Billie Burke pictures on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Harden takes charge of the Southern district for the Fox Film Corporation, whose Kansas City manager he has been. This was the first social meeting of the managers. E. C. Mills, assistant manager of the Mutual Exchange, acted as toastmaster. It is probable that similar events will be held.

LAMB ENGAGED BY PEERLESS FOR LOS ANGELES

A. B. Lamb, who for a year or more was with the United Film Exchange in Los Angeles as manager, has been engaged in that capacity by the Peerless Feature Film Company, which has opened an exchange in the L. A. Investment building, Los Angeles. The company is handling a number of state rights subjects, including the "Mutt and Jeff" comedies.

LOS ANGELES BOARD OF CENSORS ABOLISHED BY THE CITY COUNCIL

MOTION picture censoring in Los Angeles is believed to be of the past. The members of the City Council unanimously voted for an ordinance which abolishes the present board of censorship on May 1, and provides for the creation of a film commission whose duty is to see that only pictures passed by the National Board of Censorship are shown.

Members of the Ministerial Association and representatives of the W. C. T. U. and Humane Society appeared at the meeting of the council on March 29, and voiced their sentiments against the proposed ordinance. It was very apparent to the advocates of censorship that theirs was a losing fight, and the Reverend E. Guy Talbot, speaking for the Ministerial Union and Church Federation charged the municipal law makers with being a "program council" whose members saw fit to carry out a "gentlemen's agreement" made with the members of the motion picture producing colony, regardless of the evidence introduced which warranted censorship.

In brief, the new city ordinance provides that it shall be lawful to exhibit, rent, sell, loan or give away only films approved by any censor or board of censors which is recognized and approved by the film commissioner. If complaint is made to the commissioner by any citizen regarding a picture it shall be the duty of the commissioner to view the same, and if it is found to be of an obscene, immoral or indecent character the commissioner may order public exhibition of the picture stopped forthwith, and same shall not be shown until such order is revoked.

The ordinance provides a penalty of a fine of not more than five hundred dollars or imprisonment not to exceed one hundred and eighty days in the city jail, or both, for violation of provisions of the ordinance.

Another paragraph has been inserted in the ordinance which provides that theatres shall be so lighted that it is possible to discern the features of a person in any part of the house at a distance of ten feet.

Work for the passage of such an ordinance as this was commenced five months ago, and it has been a long-drawn out bitter fight with the producers, exchangemen and exhibitors united on one side, against a few ministers and so-called reformers on the other. A majority of the members of the council advocate the elimination of censorship wholly, but as a vote of two-thirds of the members of the council was necessary for the revoking of the present ordinance, it was impossible to secure passage of such an act unless a substitute was offered for the board of censors as constituted at present.

Four of the councilmen, when interviewed by a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, stated that if the film commissioner plan did not eliminate the dissatisfaction occasioned by such action as that of the board of censors, they would work for the passage of an act that would annul the film commissioner ordinance.

"PROBATIONER" PROMISES PROD FOR PICTURE PROBITY

Gus Miller, probation officer for Douglas County, Neb., in which Omaha is located, took it upon himself to go into the lower part of the downtown section the other day and threaten to close several theatres. He said the pictures were not fit for children to see and as long as there was no other power of censorship he would regulate matters himself.

Members of the exhibitors' league upheld the intention to rid the houses of objectionable pictures, but they are cautious about supporting Miller or anyone else who assumes such censorship powers.

FAILURE TO HEED FIRST WAR TAX NOTICE MAY BRING ARREST WITHOUT ANOTHER WARNING

PROPRIETORS of motion picture theatres and other places of amusements who fail to pay special war tax will be prosecuted in federal court on charges of misdemeanor, according to the announcement of Peter J. Kruyer, collector of internal revenue of the sixth district, which comprises fifty-nine counties in Indiana. A test case of this kind will be made within a few days, according to Mr. Kruyer.

Many delinquents have been found in checking the list of those operating such places of amusement and who are subject to the special tax. In some instances, according to Mr. Kruyer, delinquents have been warned, and before prosecution could be started, the guilty ones have rushed into the internal revenue office and paid their taxes and penalties. This practice must cease, according to Mr. Kruyer, who proposes to arrest the next offender and take him into federal court without even the formality of making out a bill of complaint.

The statute under which such prosecutions may be made reads as follows:

"Every person who carries on any business or occupation for which special taxes are imposed by the special war tax, without having paid the special tax herein provided, shall, besides being liable to the payment of such special tax, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Should such action as announced by Mr. Kruyer come about, it will be the first of the kind ever presented to a federal court. And in this connection comes the disputed contention that the statute governing the payment of taxes on moving picture houses and theatres could be construed in more than one light.

Some have argued that the owner of the building is liable to prosecution rather than the proprietor of the entertainment, but others who have made a study of the law say this contention is wrong. They say that only in a case wherein the proprietor has leased his building since the passage of the law is he liable to such tax, but that if the lease dates back prior to the passage of the law, then the lessee is liable.

It is known that the list of delinquents is being checked up as rapidly as possible, and that just as soon as the next delinquent is found, an arrest will be made and the case taken into federal court.

"HEART OF PAULA" ESCAPES CENSORS' STABS

"The Heart of Paula," the latest Pallas picture starring Lenore Ulrich, drew unusually large crowds to the Stanley at its premiere performance in Philadelphia.

Whether this was due to the timeliness of the Mexican background of the play, the popularity of the star or the censorial advertisement given it, is not known.

Its troubles with the censors were aired in all the Philadelphia papers. On the first viewing of the film by the censors, "The Heart of Paula" was stabbed to the quick by the large number of cuts. The producers, wishing to keep a whole heart in "Paula," applied for a rehearing, which was granted, Carl H. Pierce going from the New York office to try to hold that heart intact.

After heart to heart talks on both sides, a compromise was effected. "Paula" was allowed to be shown with but small wounds.

STATE LAW COMES FIRST IS TEXAS COURT RULING

"The true rule is, where the State law speaks, the city ordinance must be silent; where the State law is silent, the city law may speak."

This doctrine contained in the opinion of the Court of Civil Appeals, First District, at Galveston, Texas, in the case of the Zydias Amusement Company et al. vs. The City of Houston, formed the basis upon which the higher court affirmed the action of the district court of Harris County in dissolving the temporary restraining order obtained by the Zydias Amusement Company and refusing to grant an injunction against the City of Houston from prosecuting the company for exhibiting motion pictures without first having obtained a permit in accordance with an ordinance of the city of Houston regulating places of amusement.

The case is a test for the purpose of learning whether city councils have the power to regulate their local affairs, when not in conflict with the state laws The court held that the city ordinance was entirely consistent with state law and the city authorities had authority to enforce provisions of ordinances regulating appointment of censors and the handling of places of public amusement in accordance with the laws of the city.

OMAHA EXHIBITORS WIN IN EPIDEMIC CLOSING FIGHT

Omaha moving picture exhibitors have won, without going to the Supreme Court, their fight against the health commissioner's order barring children from their theatres. The health official had declared this move necessary in an effort to head off a scarlet fever epidemic raging in the city.

The exhibitors league went before the city commission and explained that several suburban houses would have to close unless the order was rescinded. One exhibitor was fined for admitting children. The district court upheld the police court decision and the matter had been prepared for the Supreme Court, when a slight decrease in the severity of the epidemic was noticed. The motion picture men immediately asked to have the order countermanded, and they asked with such a voice that it was done.

The Council Bluffs, Ia., exhibitors are now faced with the same situation, children under twelve being barred from their shows.

DISTRIBUTION OF HANDBILLS MAY BE BANNED IN CALGARY

At a special meeting of the Calgary, Alta., city council, held recently, the aldermen took up the question of prohibiting the distribution of handbills of any description, pursuant to a request made by a committee from the board of trade.

After investigation of the matter by the city solicitor the legislative committee decided that no action should be taken, although it was intimated that the question might be brought up again.

KENTUCKY AUDIENCES MARVEL AT OHIO CENSOR MENTAL KINKS

That the Ohio censors are not held in much respect in neighboring states is shown by the cries of derision that arise when motion picture theatres in Kentucky towns flash the announcement, "Passed by the Ohio Board of Censorship." One enterprising theatre manager frequently shows on the screen, "This film has been REJECTED by the Ohio Board of Censorship." Then the audience settles back contented that it will see a good picture that has been "muffed" by the Ohio censors.

Kentuckians cannot see why the Ohio censors barred "The Birth of a Nation," as it has been shown throughout the state without arousing any race prejudice.

LEXINGTON, KY., OFFICIALS REFUSE TO UPHOLD CENSOR AGITATION CRANKS

That the citizens of Lexington, Ky., are amply protected under the present laws against objectionable motion pictures and that there is no need of the appointment of a board of censorship, requested by a number of individuals and organizations, is the opinion of city officials.

Corporation Counsel James G. Denny, in an opinion given to the board of city commissioners, declares that no additional legislation is necessary to stop objectionable pictures as the ordinance at present leaves the decision in such matters entirely to the commissioner of public safety and the chief of police.

The commissioners now have the power to revoke the license of any theatre which violates the law. Mr. Denny said that he did not believe that the commissioners had the legal right to delegate this right.

KANSAS MEN PAY CENSOR FEES "UNDER PROTEST" AND PLAN TEST IN COURTS

THE action of the Kansas City, Mo., exchange men in paying the fees for censorship in Kansas under protest has already shown results. The March revenue of this department amounted to $1,662—nearly! Of that but $286 actually went into the general revenue fund of the state, the difference being the amount of checks paid to the censor "under protest."

Over six weeks ago the managers there decided to try out this plan. They believed they had a similar case as the oil people had some time ago. The state was charging an excessive fee for inspection on each barrel of oil, and it finally began cutting into the oil company's funds so much that they went to court to fight out the case there.

It was found that the state had been making a nice profit out of the inspection fees and putting it into the general fund for public use, instead of letting it revert for the benefit of the oil men. The courts declared such action should stop, and it did stop, and those men were relieved of the excessive cost of inspecting oil, which had devolved into a considerable profit for the state.

The moving picture men believe that theirs is a similar case and are now paying all of their fees "under protest." This is with the exception of several small companies that have only two or three pictures to be censored each month.

By proceeding along this "protest" line, the show people have put it up to the state to start the suit for actual possession of the money. As it now stands, if a public official takes it upon himself to turn this money into the general revenue fund, he is liable to be held responsible. Consequently it is not being handled that way. The state, not getting this money, will probably serve a mandamus on Earl Akers, state treasurer, to compel him to hand over the money which he has received "under protest." Then he will ask the film people, "Why?" Then they will bring into court the oil inspection case decision and maintain that the department is being run for revenue, and that the two-dollar-a-reel fee is unconstitutional.

SYNCHRONIZING OF MUSIC AND PICTURE DESTROYED BY CENSOR CUTS

Another argument against censorship and the injury wrought by the cutting of pictures at the orders of censors, has been brought to light by Joseph Carl Breil of the Fine Arts studio musical staff.

Mr. Breil points out that the indiscriminate cutting by the censors oftimes destroys the synchronizing of the music and the film, and calls attention to the fact that the censors may cause to be eliminated the scene which furnishes the motive for the incidental music.

The musical score Mr. Breil contends is very frequently seriously damaged in that the most important measures must be eliminated in order that the music synchronize with the film which has been shortened.

As incidental music is now being prepared for practically all subjects, film men believe too much stress cannot be laid on this point.

LOTTERY CHARGES STILL HELD UP IN VANCOUVER

Although the Vancouver (B.C.) authorities instituted suits against two stores, charging them with conducting lotteries, in that they advertised drawings for automobiles and gave numbered tickets for such drawings to purchasers of goods, the cases have been postponed repeatedly and the latest postponement gives the stores an opportunity to conduct their drawings as advertised.

It was felt, it is stated, that it would be unjust to prevent these drawings, as such practices have been common in Vancouver for several years.

So far no action has been taken against the various theatres which are still conducting weekly drawings.

British Government Puts Ban on Many Film Exports

Special to Motion Picture News

London, March 20.

APROPOS the much talked of restrictions on imported film is the announcement in the official Government publication, the London Gazette, that on and after March 27 the exportation of kinematograph and photograph films, exposed or unexposed, photograph plates and printing paper, besides other articles, is prohibited.

Thus the British film industry will not be allowed the full scope that one might desire for its development; but the new move will certainly have the effect of reducing the quantity of raw film stock imported.

Ellen Terry, the eminent actress, has at last, it is said, consented to play for the pictures, and will take part in one of the Ideal productions. "Caste," the film in which Sir John Hare appears, is also being handled by the Ideal Company, and nothing would arouse greater interest than for these two reputed artistes to act in the same film.

In the course of the next few months the Lucoque Company of London will be engaged in a film version of the well-known adventure story, "King Solomon's Mines." At present the company is occupying itself with a dramatised adaptation of Sam Rohmer's novel, "Dr. Fu Manchu." The films will be produced under the supervision of Mr. T. Bentley. The Lucoque Company also controls the rights of some of the best known works by such noted authors as Jerome K. Jerome, Tom Callon, Rider Haggard and Baroness Orczy.

One of the leading British films which is making a widespread appeal is entitled, "Britain Prepared," a subject dealing with the formation of the new armies, work at the munition factories and scenes of the British fleet.

Special War Films

The special war films, taken with the authority of the Government, are showing a great improvement and the last series is undoubtedly much better than either the first or the second batches. Among some of the interesting scenes to be seen in the set of films just to hand, are some of the British troops with their new steel helmets, preparations for attack behind a curtain of smoke, some views of trench life, and a graphic panorama revealing the havoc and destruction wrought by bombardment.

"Trelawny of the Wells" has been awarded the "blue riband" of the year in the category of all-British productions, and without doubt is the premier production from the Hepworth studios. Those who attended the trade show received a copy of a special edition of Sir Arthur Pinero's play, in which there was printed a full cast, and also a photograph of Alma Taylor as Rose Trelawny.

During the past year the "Flying A" establishment has quadrupled its output, and henceforth will be putting on the market as many as eighteen reels a week. They will be chosen from such brands as "Flying A," Beauty, Signal, Masterpictures, Vogue, American Masterpictures, Signal serials, Mustang, Clipper and American serials. The Signal and Vogue films are quite new to the British public. Great hopes are entertained of the Signal films, the first of the serials being "The Girl and the Game," a railroad drama in five chapters.

At the present time there is quite a boom in serial films and the Trans-Atlantic Company is anticipating a move in the direction of shorter serials. At the present time this company is releasing "The Broken Coin" for the earlier part of the week, and "The Purple Iris" will be released for the week-end, in six parts, each of 2,000 feet. "Elaine's" successor will be "The Girl of Lost Island," by the Pathe Company. Other new serials to be put on the market shortly are "Greed," by the Trans-Atlantic Company, in twenty parts of 2,000 feet instalments; and "The Diamond from the Sky," by the Gaumont Company, in thirty parts.

The motor Ambulance convoy to which so many American firms have subscribed is to be reviewed this week by His Majesty the King. It may be a matter of interest to know that in all a sum of well over £30,000 was collected.

Dine Harold Shaw Before His Departure

Prior to his departure for America, Harold Shaw, who for over two years was chief producer for the London Film Company, was entertained by his colleagues and friends to a farewell dinner at which he was presented with a handsome cigarette case by R. Dewsbury, joint managing director of the London Film Company. The hope was expressed Mr. Shaw would soon return to England and give the British public more of his fine pictures.

George Smith, the London representative of the Vitagraph Company, is on a visit to America and has already left England by the Orduna. It is two years since Mr. Smith last visited the States.

The trade show will be held in London shortly of another startling all-British production entitled, "The Flapper and the Curates," produced by the Regal Company.

The Williamson Submarine pictures, Trans-Atlantic, which have achieved such success at the Philharmonic Hall, London, are to be followed at Easter by the Scott Antarctic film, which is being anticipated with considerable fervor.

Something new and original is wanted in the way of comedies, and the series to be issued very shortly by the Selig Company promises to fulfill this need. "The Chronicles of Bloom Centre," relating to rural life in a small village in the States, is quite a new theme, and its novelty at least will be a commending feature.

The staffs of many of the leading film firms have been seriously depleted by the active recruiting efforts, and the matter has been, and is, one of grave concern to quite a number of companies. A move is now afoot by which it is hoped to minimize the inconvenience which might be caused by replacing men who have left their employment to join the colors, with soldiers and sailors physically unfit for further service. Over thirty firms have so far lent their support to this proposal.

MAE MARSH, HARRON AND LUCAS IN SAME PICTURE

Los Angeles, April 8.

The hope that Production Manager Frank E. Woods has cherished for five years, is soon to be realized, as Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and Wilfred Lucas have been cast to appear in a Fine Arts subject as yet unnamed, but which has been taken up in rehearsal and is now being produced under the direction of Paul Powell.

Five years ago Mr. Woods was motion picture critic on a theatrical publication and reviewed "Man's Genesis" with these three players in the principal parts. This was directed by D. W. Griffith and was the first primitive motion picture released. In his criticism Mr. Woods suggested that the three should continue to play together. It so happened that they were separated after that subject was completed, and this is the first time they have been cast together.

TWENTY FILM COMPANIES NOW IN MALLERS BUILDING, CHICAGO

With the removal of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, Chicago, from the People's Gas Building to the fifth floor of the Mallers Building, the latter edifice now houses about twenty film concerns. The Exhibitors' Supply concern now has tripled its floor space for show rooms, stock rooms and offices.

The already extensive lines of theatre equipment carried by this firm have been greatly enlarged.

Famous Psychologist Writes Book on Photoplay

Professor Munsterberg, Whose Interest in Screen Led Him to Enter Field as Contributor to Pictographs, Declares This Generation Wants to Be Taught by Eye

ONE of the most important pieces of literature yet written relative to the motion picture industry is that issued the past week, "The Photoplay: A Psychological Study," by Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, the Harvard psychologist, whose great interest in the screen led him to enter the field as a writer of scenarios, entitled "Testing the Mind," which have formed a part of the Paramount Pictographs.

His latest literary work—he has written twenty-four books on the psychology of different subjects—is in 233 pages, divided into two parts, preceded by an introduction. In his introduction the psychologist discusses "The Outer Development of the Moving Picture" and "The Inner Development of the Moving Picture."

In the study of the psychology of the photoplay, Prof. Munsterberg discusses, first, "Depth and Movement," "Attention," "Memory and Imagination" and "Emotions." Under the second division of the book, "The Esthetics of the Photoplay," he discusses "The Purpose of Art," "The Means of the Various Arts," "The Means of the Photoplay," "The Demands of the Photoplay" and "The Function of the Photoplay."

Prof. Munsterberg says that it is arbitrary to say where the development of the moving pictures began, and it is impossible to foresee where it will lead. He traces its development from "that camera obscura" which allowed one glass slide to pass before another, and thus showed the railway train on one slide moving over the bridge on the other slide to its present-day accomplishments. He asserts that "the last achievement in this universe of photo-knowledge is 'the magazine on the screen,'" discussing at length the Paramount Pictographs.

"Much American history in the last two decades was deeply influenced by the columns of illustrated magazines. Those men who reached the millions by such articles cannot overlook the fact—they may approve or condemn it—that the masses of today prefer to be taught by pictures rather than by words. The audiences are assembled anyhow. Instead of feeding them with mere entertainment, why not give them food for serious thought?

"It seemed, therefore, a most fedtile idea when the Paramount Pictograph was founded to carry intelligent messages and ambitious discussions into the film houses. Political and economic, social and hygienic, technical and industrial, esthetic and scientific questions can in no way be brought nearer to the grasp of millions."

In the conclusion of his book, in speaking on "The Function of the Photoplay," Prof. Munsterberg says that motion pictures "have become the most popular entertainment of the country; nay, of the world, and their influence is one of the strongest social energies of our time. Signs indicate that this popularity and this influence are increasing from day to day.

"The richest source of the unique satisfaction in the photoplay is probably that esthetic feeling which is significant for the new art and which we have understood from its psychological conditions. The massive outer world has lost its weight, it has been freed from space, time, and casualty, and it has been clothed in the forms of our own consciousness. The mind has triumphed over matter, and the pictures roll on with the ease of musical tones. It is a superb enjoyment which no other art can furnish us.

"No wonder that temples for the new goddess are built in every little hamlet."

MARY PICKFORD GIVES $2,000 CHECK FOR ACTORS' FUND AFTER HIPPODROME BENEFIT

With the receipt of a check for $2,000 at the executive offices of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, the largest individual contribution so far received was recorded.

This check was from Mary Pickford and represented her share of the gross receipts of a recent Sunday night's program at the New York Hippodrome when she appeared in a filmed sketch, as a speaking actress with James J. Corbett and Donald Brian in the principal parts and her director and studio company in the cast.

"Secret Kingdom" Locales in Dark Over War News

People in Texas Localities Where Vitagraph Thirty-One Serial Was Filmed Know Less About Mexican Situation Than the Newspaper Readers Up North, Says Arline Pretty

ACCORDING to Arline Pretty, the Vitagraph star who has just concluded a long camera campaign in and around San Antonio, Tex., filming scenes of the new Vitagraph serial, "The Secret Kingdom," which it is said will be released through V-L-S-E, the people of the East are better informed of the details of the army hunt for Villa than the average citizen on the ground.

During the stay of "The Secret Kingdom" company at San Antonio, the air was vibrant with war and rumors of war, following Villa's raid on Columbus, according to Miss Pretty, who prior to her entry into the screen field was a well-known figure in official and social Washington circles. She met many old Washington acquaintances among the army officers and their wives stationed at General Funston's headquarters, and for a time was the guest of General and Mrs. Funston at their home in Fort Sam Houston. The actress became deeply imbued with the "war fever."

ARLINE PRETTY

"Whatever General Funston and his officers know about the progress of affairs across the border, they keep to themselves," said Miss Pretty.

"The consequence is that the folks in the border towns are not half as well informed about what is happening a short distance away from them as the people who read the daily papers in the East. The reason for this is that the papers here get their news fresh from Washington, where it has been transmitted direct by General Funston. But, of course, so far as telling interesting tales to his Texas constituents go, the general might just as well be speechless.

"It was a funny thing to feel that all around there were matters developing which would figure large in our history, and yet you were kept in blank ignorance of what was transpiring. Why, often when newspapers arrived from New York, we learned for the first time of what the American soldiers were doing in their chase across the border.

"This state of affairs might have annoyed us a lot, if it wasn't for the fact that the company was kept too busy to waste precious hours in vague speculation about the probabilities and possibilities hingeing on the Mexican expedition. We had troubles of our own, for there are thirty-one reels in 'The Secret Kingdom.'"

"The Secret Kingdom" was directed by Theodore Marston. Besides Arline Pretty and Charles Richman, the cast includes Dorothy Kelly, Joseph Kilgour, Ned Finley, Robert Whitworth and William E. Dunn. Arthur Ross was the cameraman for the picture.

SILVERMAN AND CHARNAS CONFER WITH KOPFSTEIN OVER PACEMAKER FRANCHISE

When invitations were sent the leading independent exchange owners to become members of the Pacemaker Company, several of the exchange owners came to New York and the Pacemaker's temporary office at 116 Nassau street was the scene of spirited bidding for the franchises.

Among the independent exchange owners who made special trips to New York to confer with Mr. Kopfstein regarding Pacemaker franchises were Mayer Silverman, of the Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, and H. L. Charnas, of the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland.

Efficiency Plan Applied to Pictures by Davis

General Manager of Universal City, Whose Methods Were Scoffed at as Impossible a Few Months Ago, Systematizes Production and Cuts Cost of One and Two-Reel Subjects, Besides Raising the Quality of the Pictures—He Expects to Further Reduce Costs Without Sacrificing Picture Merit

TO minutely systematize picture production was the aim of H. O. Davis when he assumed the general managership of Universal City on the first of December. The usual jeers of the wiseacres greeted the announcement. It was impossible to systematize art. Art must have a free swing. Temperament must not be interfered with. Mr. Davis' proposition was a confirmed failure before it started, according to the predictions of the know-it-alls. But after four months of operation it has proven a success. Sane, hard headed business methods, as applied to the management of a producing organization, have shown returns in better pictures at less expense.

It will be remembered that before he assumed his present duties Mr. Davis was directing the management of the San Diego fair. From there he brought with him men whom he understood and who understood him; men who would carry out his ideas as to the management of the picture plant. These men he placed under him in executive and managerial positions of importance.

"It was naturally a bold step," said Mr. Davis to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, with whom he talked while on a recent trip to New York, "neither myself nor my associates had ever been actively engaged in the picture business before our connection with Universal. Directors and players didn't think much of taking orders from a novice.

"Now, however," continued Mr. Davis, "there is not an employee in the California film city who wants to go back to the old order of things. System prevails where chaos reigned before.

No More Square Pegs for Round Holes

"One of my first steps was to do away with the regular company of players who always worked under the same director. Under the former regime, a director would cast his picture from his limited stock company with the result that if he hadn't a player to fit a certain part, that part would be made to fit a certain player.

"Our production department now does the casting and they select every member of the cast with care. If a script calls for a character actor of a certain type, the production department selects such a player from a list of one hundred and fifty. By following a similar line of procedure in regard to other types of characters we can cast a picture practically to perfection.

"The duties of a director have been curtailed in other ways than in the matter of casting. A director at Universal City now only has to see to it that his company brings out the story vividly and suitably. My directors have nothing whatsoever to do with the erection of settings. It stands to reason that a director whose business it is to produce a story is not as well versed in architecture and interior decorating.

"To insure exactitude in these matters I employ a competent staff of draftsmen, paper hangers, carpet layers, picture hangers, men familiar with furniture of all periods and it is their duty to completely equip the settings required. When finished the production department O.K.'s the set after a careful examination and is is then ready for the director.

Loss Eliminated by New System

"This process eliminates loss of time and unnecessary expense. The director of former days might spend a day on each set, but now everything is ready for him when he comes to work in the morning, for we employ a night staff of men to erect the settings. Then, too, a director and his company can go directly from one setting to another, without long intermissions in which to lose the spirit of the story."

Mr. Davis showed the NEWS representatives his method of preparing a picture for production. The kind of furniture required for each scene, the various props, from pictures to grape juice, are itemized and the cost of everything is listed. The scene is then sketched roughly, then sent to the production department for construction. But before any work is started the cost of production, including every expense from salaries to the purchase price of the story, is estimated. The production department also keeps tabs on every director, so that when he has finished a certain set of scenes, everything will be ready for his next set.

"The department to which I am now devoting my closest attention," went on Mr. Davis, "is the scenario department. It is not perfected yet, for the old order of things is a hard one to change. However, I have done much in this line also. Each week a large staff of readers carefully goes over the huge number of copyrighted stories that come to the studios.

"Of each one they prepare a brief synopsis. The remainder go to a more experienced staff who eliminate more. The production department then receives the script and when they have made their eliminations the residue comes to me. Those that get that far are then turned over to the continuity department which puts them in scenario form.

Better Pictures Is Result

"And all this systematizing of production has done much. It has eliminated waste time. It has made better pictures. And it has cut the cost of pictures. One and two reel subjects are made now for one half the price they were made heretofore. The price of threes and fives has been reduced, not so much, but it has been reduced. Business methods applied to picture production have succeeded and they will meet even greater success in the future."

New Series of "Twilight Sleep" Pictures Ready

Subjects Total About Three Thousand Feet and Will Be Put Out as Educationals for Exhibition to Women Audiences Only, Declares Manager Ross

THE Modern Motherhood League has entered the film field with a new series of Twilight Sleep pictures that have no connection whatever with the former production dealing with the same subject.

These pictures have been compiled for feminine audiences only and are put out purely as an educational proposition. They total about three thousand feet in length and show the benefits of Twilight Sleep in detailed degree.

The films were taken under the supervision of Dr. Schlossingk, who introduced Twilight Sleep to America. It is the same practice discovered by Drs. Kronig and Gauss in Freiberg, Germany, which caused such widespread comment several months ago.

Ben Ross, general manager of the Motherhood League, believes that the immense amount of publicity received by the introduction of Twilight Sleep will be of great benefit to his pictures. Articles by noted medical men have appeared in such widely read publications as McClure's, the Ladies' World, Ladies' Home Journal, American, Metropolitan, journals of the medical profession and many others. Besides an unusual amount of comment was received from the daily newspapers on the subject.

It is the plan of Mr. Ross and his company to market the production on the state rights basis. A lecture, the same as that which has been delivered by Dr. Schlossingk, will be furnished with the films, written in such a simplified manner that it may be read intelligently by a layman, it is announced.

"I wish it definitely understood," said Mr. Ross to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, "that these pictures are not for mixed audiences. Other pictures dealing with Twilight Sleep have been so fashioned as to permit their exhibiton before both men and women, and as a result they have agitated the National Board of Review and the various censor boards.

"As our picture is going out as an educational there will be little if any agitation. The films show the proper feeding of the patient while approaching a state of maternity.

"Besides the pictures go minutely into the matters of the proper clothing, feeding and bathing of the mother and child. The correct raiment for the woman about to become a mother is also exhibited."

The headquarters of the Motherhood League are situated in the Longacre building in Times Square, New York City.

OGDEN CRANE IN "DAVY CROCKETT" FOR PALLAS

Ogden Crane, for almost a quarter of a century a characterizer of "heavy" roles, is now busily engaged in his initial work for Pallas Pictures at Los Angeles.

Mr. Crane gained his early theatrical experience in stock in New York, Cincinnati, Denver and other metropolitan cities, and later appeared under the management of such producers as Charles Frohman, William A. Brady, Liebler and Company in important roles with Robert Hilliard, Emmett Corrigan, Maclyn Arbuckle, Louis Mann and others of equal fame.

OGDEN CRANE

Supporting Mary Pickford in "Caprice," the Famous Players success, Mr. Crane appeared for the first time before the motion picture camera in 1910.

A son of Mme. Ogden Crane, late dramatic singer and instructor of New York, Ogden became associated with the stage at an early age after graduating from public and preparatory schools in Newburgh, N. Y. His first role for Pallas Pictures will be in "Davy Crockett," an elaborate film version of the famous story in which Dustin Farnum portrays the title role.

Ten Famous Stars in Work for Lasky This Summer

With Close of Operatic and Dramatic Season Company Expects to Send This Number to Its West Coast Studios—Goldfish Goes to California for Conference

With the approaching close of the operatic and theatrical season it is announced that some eight or ten prominent stars will go to the Lasky studios this summer.

The coming spring and summer months promise to be the busiest in the history of the Lasky studios. Marie Doro, who achieved prominence as a star of the Famous Players Film Company, is now completing her first photoplay for the Lasky Company entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn."

She and Elliott Dexter will soon begin her second production for the same producers. Fannie Ward is ready to start on another production, as are Blanche Sweet and Mae Murray, who has just finished a picturization of the David Belasco production, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs."

The Lasky company during the next six or eight weeks will release the photoplay entitled "Alien Souls," in which Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aaki, appear in the leading roles. Hayakawa is best remembered as the Japanese who played opposite Fannie Ward in Cecil B. De Mille's production, "The Cheat."

The Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, of which Mr. Goldfish is chairman, has effected a national organization, and it is believed that before May 1 more than five thousand exhibitors will join the thousand who already have signified their willingness to give a portion of the receipts of May 15, when the public will do its share towards the Actors' Fund by attending motion picture theatres from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In this way, by stimulating public interest on May 15, the percentage of receipts to the Actors' Fund which the exhibitors are asked to give will not in any way be a loss to them personally, but they will be the agents collecting many thousand dollars for the Actors' Fund.

In the course of his trip to the Pacific coast and return Mr. Goldfish will meet the chairmen of the committees in various cities, including the chief cities of the country—Chicago, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles, where Mr. Jesse L. Lasky is chairman of the local committee.

No "Unsettled Conditions" in Gaumont Lexicon

Head of French Firm Who Recently Came Here to Confer with Freuler of Mutual and Sailed for Europe on April 5, Is Satisfied with Business Outlook

LEON GAUMONT, head of the great firm of Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, who has been visiting in America since March 15, sailed for Europe on the American liner New York April 5. Although Mr. Gaumont spent only three weeks in New York, it is safe to say that he carried back with him a thorough understanding of present conditions in the film industry.

"My stay in America has not been so prolonged as I might wish," said Mr. Gaumont, just before sailing, "but after having transacted my business here and after having several conferences with President John R. Freuler, of the Mutual Film Corporation, through which Gaumont photodramas are released, I thought it best to return immediately to France.

"I came to America somewhat influenced by what I had read concerning unsettled conditions here. I am going home thoroughly satisfied with conditions as they apply to my own interests and the Mutual Film Corporation, and am highly optimistic for the future.

"Present conditions are natural, inevitable. My own companies, however, are in excellent condition to meet any changed circumstances brought about by economic demands. In addition to the Gaumont photodrama work done in America, at the Gaumont Laboratories, Flushing, N. Y., we also edit and manufacture the Mutual Weekly and the interesting split-reel, which contains the scenic series, 'See America First,' and the Kartoon Komics, animated, by Cartoonist Harry Palmer.

"This is my first trip since the war started. I hope that it will be possible for me to get over again next season, as I am interested in seeing the changes which I believe will have ensued during my absence. As I said before, I am in harmony with the work that has been done and well pleased with the prospects for the coming year."

Florence Lawrence Subject in May for Bluebird

"Illusive Isabel," Cut from Eight to Five Reels, Is Picture with Sensational Fillip to Wake Up Sleepy Audiences

ROBERT LEONARD and Ella Hall in "The Crippled Hand"; Florence Lawrence in "Illusive Isabel"; Louise Lovely and J. Warren Kerrigan, the last two named stars appearing in features which have not been definitely supplied with titles, will constitute the Bluebird releases for the first four Mondays in May, although they may not be released to exhibitors in the order given.

"The Crippled Hand" has been set for May 1 release. Robert Leonard, who appears as one of the featured characters, also shared with David Kirkland the work of directing. Ella Hall will be seen opposite Mr. Leonard, in the role of a shop-girl, who is a dreamer, both by night in her attic room and by day behind the handkerchief counter of a department store. Her day dreams lost her the job she held, but the result of her discharge was her translation to improved conditions as the wife of the handsome Prince of her dreams —Robert Leonard, a millionaire.

The other Bluebirds scheduled for May run largely to sensationalism, it is announced, "Illusive Isabel," being particularly sensational. It was originally made in eight reels, but has been reduced to five. Florence Lawrence is introduced as a Bluebird star in this picture, and her role is said to be well suited to her abilities.

Los Angeles, April 8.

Pathé's "Lonesome Luke" comedies are proving to be one of the strongest drawing cards on many an exhibitor's program. Last week at the Optic theatre in Los Angeles one of the comedies was being shown and the manager recognized Harold Lloyd, the "Lonesome Luke" of these Rolin comedies, in the audience.

He dragged the bashful comedian to the stage, and coaxed him into a speech. "Luke" was so frightened by the large audience that his tremblings almost rattled the boards of the stage, but the audience thought it was real comedy stuff and fairly raised the roof with their applause. The comedian made the biggest hit of the evening.

Thanhouser Ball for Employees' Relief Fund

Company Will Give Minstrel Show at Germania Hall, New Rochelle, on April 27—And of Course All the Studio Beauties Will Be Present

THE nucleus of a very commendable movement for film folk is the forthcoming Thanhouser minstrel show and ball at Germania Hall, New Rochelle, on Thursday, April 27. The proceeds of the affair will make the foundation for the Thanhouser Relief Fund. This fund will be in the custody of a committee of players and will be used for the relief of any players who in the course of their work at the New Rochelle studio are either incapacitated or otherwise in need of aid.

The admirable feature of the plan is that the helping hand is not confined to regular workers only. Should an "extra" be injured or should the plight of anyone who only occasionally engages in the work call for succor, they will be given the same consideration as players who are on the regular payroll of the company. This is entirely separate and apart from any benefits that may accrue to a performer by virtue of accident or liability insurance.

Florence La Badie, escorted by Mayor Griffing, of New Rochelle, will head the grand promenade, which will be made up of the film stars who will attend. She will also take part in an old-time minstrel torch light parade through the streets of New Rochelle the night before the ball. Gladys Hulette will be there in her usual radiance, and other players who will make the ball a memorable occasion are Grace De Carlton, Kathryn Adams, Ethyle Cooke, Carey Hastings, Gladys Leslie, Doris Grey, Isolde Illian and Frances Keyes.

The outlook for a good lump sum to found the fund is cheery. There is an immense advance sale of tickets. Perry Horton, chairman of arrangements, promises a big time for the visitors. The show will be a surprise, too. Lindsay Morrison is stage and musical director, and a feature of the evening will be the playing of compositions by Frederick Sullivan, a Thanhouser director.

Frank Grimmer and William Swan, respectively treasurer and secretary of the fund, are hard at work getting things in shape. Captained by Lydia Meade, the prettiest girls available will cater to the guests, as follows:

Flower Girls.—Gladys Leslie, chairman; Betty Lawson, Doris Grey and Isolde Illian.

Candy Girls.—Gladys Hulette, chairman; Dolly Bartley, Mabel Henry, Kathryn Adams and Lillian Muller.

Cigarette Girls.—Fanna Gregory, chairman; Mrs. Axetiane Hoegh, Dorothy Cooper, Anna Gregory and Grace Frances.

Ushers.—Majorie Swan, head usher; Agnes Johnston, Bunnie Manning, Lydia Meade, Ethyle Cooke, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Florence Freese, Millie Dessoir, Anna Stewart, Caddy Hastings, Frances Keyes, Lillian Vander-Veer, Marguerite Mall.

Universal to Donate Trophy for Auto Race

Large Silver Cup, Valued at $3,500, Will Be Presented to Winner of Twenty-Four Hour Contest at Sheepshead Bay Course, Held Under Auspices of Automobile Association

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company, through Carl Laemmle, president, will donate a trophy in the shape of a large cup to the winner of a twenty-four-hour automobile race to be held on the Sheepshead Bay course, New York, under the auspices of the American Automobile Association and the Trade Racing Association, Inc. The race is scheduled to start at ten o'clock on Friday, June 16, to continue until the same hour on Saturday, June 17.

This will be as big a racing event in Eastern automobile circles of the coming season as the Vanderbilt Cup race and the Grand Prize race at Santa Monica, Cal. It is also the first racing event in automobile circles of the summer.

The trophy to be presented by President Laemmle is valued at $3,500. It stands thirty-six inches high and has a ten and a half inch base. It is surmounted by a large globe, the trademark of Universal, and around this runs a replica of the Sheepshead Bay race track. The cup is of silver with a base of onyx and is artistically decorated. It is now being completed by Black, Starr and Frost, of New York.

The race will conform with the rules laid down by the A. A. A. contest board, controlled by the Trade Racing Association, of which Thomas Moore is the head. The trophy will be known as the Universal Film Trophy and will be competed for by manufacturers' motor cars, defined by the association as "Stock Chassis" cars, for a period of five years. The cup will be loaned after the contest to the entrant finishing first in competition. Permanent possession of the trophy after the five-year period has elapsed will be determined by the highest number of points received in each race by each entrant.

The Universal Animated Weekly has made plans to film pictures of the race at various hours, and it is also announced that a five-reel feature will be written around the event. This feature will contain all the exciting incidents of the race, woven into a realistic and thrilling story, it is announced.

Mr. Laemmle has tendered the trophy to A. A. Cordner, of the Trade Racing Association, with a formal deed of gift in which specifications and requirements for entrants in the race are noted in full detail.

ALICE RINALDO IS CAST FOR AN IMPORTANT ROLE IN APRIL 24 HORSLEY

One of the leading roles in "The Conscience of John David," a David Horsley production starring Crane Wilbur and scheduled for release on April 24 as a Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe, will be played by Alice Rinaldo, whose work in "The Love Liar" won a longer engagement with the Horsley forces.

ALICE RINALDO

Miss Rinaldo is best known in this country and abroad as a ballroom dancer. Three years ago she entered motion pictures, and has been engaged with various producing companies on the Coast.

It Sure Is "Ladies First" in Actors' Fund Gifts

Men Behind When Theda Bara Mails Check for $200, Pearl White and Marguerite Clark Send $100 Each, to Say Nothing of Mary Pickford's $2,000

THEDA BARA, Pearl White and Marguerite Clark are the stars of the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America to date. They have made the largest personal contributions so far in the great movement inaugurated by the heads of the film industry to raise $500,000 of the permanent $1,000,000 endowment of the Fund.

Miss Bara has drawn a check for two hundred dollars to J. Stuart Blackton, treasurer of the Motion Picture Campaign, and Miss White and Miss Clark have given one hundred dollars each. The largest single contribution was Mary Pickford's $2,000, representing her share of the Hippodrome tribute performance at which she appeared in person.

Reports from all over the country coming in to the headquarters of the Campaign promise great results in the canvass in the near future. Everywhere motion picture men are taking up the work with enthusiasm and being assured of loyal support from the public.

In the Northwest the branch committee is most active. Led by F. S. Fountain, of Seattle, Wash., one of the big film men of the West, the motion picture men of the section, big and small, are striving to show the East what they can do.

In the Middle West also the work is booming. John Kunsky, who is the active chairman of the Detroit committee, has thrown the force of his ten big theatres into the campaign in addition to his valuable personal services as the head of the canvass in that district.

Buffalo is preparing for big doings. Chairman Brandon, of the Buffalo Screen Club, is arranging a mammoth grand ball and entertainment to be held in the near future. Besides providing an undoubted large sum for the cause, this affair will tend to awaken the interest of the public in National Tribute Day. Mr. Brandon reports enthusiastically that the people of Buffalo "will be there."

In Philadelphia on April 24 another grand ball and entertainment is to be given by the local committee. The proprietors of the big Philadelphia newspapers have interested themselves in the campaign and, besides giving it the hearty support of their journals, are serving actively on the various sub-committees.

In New York last week a fine tribute performance for the cause was given at the Eighty-first Street Theatre. On this occasion no less than nineteen motion picture stars appeared in person and were presented to the audience to loud acclaim.

Chaplin Feet to Waddle in "Floorwalker" on May 15

Plot, Based on Experience of Mutual Comedian in East, Is Expected to Show Use of Department Store Material Is Not "Bootless," If Handled Efficiently

"THE FLOORWALKER," which will be the first of the new Mutual-Chaplin's, is now under production by Charles Chaplin and his company at the studio in Hollywood. It will be released according to schedule on May 15.

The script is from the pen of Vincent Bryan, who utilizes material which Chaplin is said to have gathered in a certain New York department store while he was in the East recently.

A selected cast of players will support Chaplin in this and subsequent releases, all of which will be in two reels each. Edna Purviance, who will play leads opposite the comedian, appeared in similar roles with the Chaplin Essanay Company. Another player of note in the company is Charlotte Mineau, who was with Essanay for five years and who for the past six months has been supporting Otis Harlan in the picturization of the Hoyt farces at the Selig studios.

Ingenue roles will be played by Leota Bryan. Leo White, the English comedian, who has supported Chaplin ever since the latter was first starred; Eric Campbell, a legitimate player and film producer, who will play heavies, and Lloyd Bacon, a recent recruit to the picture field, are also numbered in the Mutual-Chaplin Company.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that bookings for the new Chaplin comedies have been signed with exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Reuterdahl Continues Preparedness Campaign

Expert on Naval Matters Who Recently Demanded, in Address Before American Defense Society, Resignation of Secretary Daniels, Picturizes Navy Needs in Pictographs

FOLLOWING his attack on the five-year naval program of Secretary Daniels, made at an address before the American Defense Society, Henry Reuterdahl, the naval expert, is carrying out his campaign for naval preparedness in a series of picturized arguments presented in Paramount Pictographs. In his address Mr. Reuterdahl demanded that Secretary Daniels be asked to resign, declaring that the secretary has failed to grasp the vital needs of the navy. What these needs are Mr. Reuterdahl points out in his screen arguments for Paramount.

The "Testing the Mind" series which Hugo Munsterberg, the eminent Harvard psychologist, is contributing to the Pictographs, are to be utilized by him for the teaching of the fundamentals of psychology in his classroom at Harvard.

Another division of the Pictographs, entitled "Better Babies," and designed to cooperate with the country-wide movement "for bringing up a better race," shows, in the next release, mental tests for the child. In accomplishing this, a six months' old child is pictured. How the normal child of this age should react toward sounds and bright objects is shown, and then the same process is visualized in the cases of the eighteen months' baby, and children of three and four years.

ALL-STAR CASTS ORDER FOR ESSANAY'S, INCLUDING SHORT FILMS

All-star casts have become the rule of Essanay, and the plan is followed even in the short-reel pictures. It is not unusual for a two-reel Essanay to include in its cast four or five persons of national prominence in the film world.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay believes the public is entitled to as good acting as it is possible to obtain, and therefore he has ordered that even the least of the supporting parts must be taken by actors and actresses of established reputation.

Sawyer Flays Ministerial Picture Slanderer

President of Cleveland League Shows Talk of Pulpit Orator Against Alleged Bad Influence of Photodrama Is Unsupported by Facts—Sam Bullock Fires a Hot One

Special to Motion Picture News.

Cleveland, O., April 8.

NATIONAL President Fred J. Herrington was one of many distinguished visitors present at last Tuesday's meeting of the North Eastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held at the Cleveland headquarters. It was an open meeting, the principal business being an official reply by Cleveland President Ben J. Sawyer to attacks recently made on film men by the Rev. Dr. George Hugh Birney. Dr. Birney was among those present. Another visitor was Kate Davis, president of the International People's Aid Association.

President Herrington brought with him samples of cut-outs ordered by Pennsylvania censors. One was that of a smiling baby, another that of a proud father, and the third that of happy parents bending over the cradle of their baby. "The censors object to these views because they say they are apt to destroy the illusion that babies are brought by the stork," Mr. Herrington said, while his hearers rocked with merriment.

"The question which concerns us is, 'Who is going to censor the censors?'" Mr. Herrington added.

The national president asserted that when no two people could agree on the merits or demerits of a particular film, no person or persons had the right to set themselves up as censors of films.

"The American public will be the censors, the real censors, in the last analysis," he declared.

"If the motion picture is going to be responsible for placing on the statute books of our government that despotic thing known as censorship, then, for goodness sake, kill the motion picture, but do not give us censorship in this country," Mr. Herrington asserted.

Attorney Ben J. Sawyer described Dr. Birney as a good man gone astray. "He has lost faith in the power of Christ to draw men to him, and he wants to substitute his own power. He has lost faith in the law of God, and he wants to rewrite it. He wants to revise the letters of Paul to the Christians in the new-born century and bring them up to date.

"Dr. Birney, your criticism is unsupported by facts. It is an exaggeration that casts reflection upon your brother, that should cause you to blush with shame. Not a single case of delinquency has ever been directly or indirectly traced to a motion picture.

"How can a man tell what is going on in a world he does not live in? The picture men live among the people. They are of them. They know each other. And they resent as false the conclusions of Dr. Birney. The picture men believe they have as good a right to exercise their moral judgment as has Dr. Birney. If they are mistaken they want it proven before a jury of their peers, so that all mankind may be benefited.

"In future, Dr. Birney, when you have anything to criticise come to us. We are not criminals. We do not merit public pillories. We will be only too glad to lend you a receptive ear," Mr. Sawyer said.

Attorney Sawyer, speaking generally on the question of censorship, declared that no form of censorship could live in this country. "Either censorship must die or freedom must die," he asserted.

Dr. Birney said he was glad to hear the exhibitors' side of the question, but protested against his motives being impugned. He intimated that the discussion had but just commenced and invited the exhibitors to hear his answer to Attorney Sawyer in his sermon next Sunday night.

Exhibitor Samuel Bullock told the meeting that more immoral pictures had been projected on the screen in Ohio since the institution of the censors than ever before.

ELLA HALL REACHES BLUEBIRD STARDOM IN "CRIPPLED HAND"

The elevation of Ella Hall to Bluebird stardom, in "The Crippled Hand," will be hailed as a mark of recognition for meritorious work in the three years this pretty girl has appeared upon the screen. She

McDERMOTT, FORMER EDISON STAR, NOW A VITAGRAPHER

Marc McDermott, who is well-known for his work in Edison photoplays, has severed his connections with that company and in the future will be seen in pictures bearing the trade mark of the Vitagraph Company.

Mr. McDermott was one of the first actors of the legitimate stage to enter the motion picture field—over seven years ago. He was born in Knightsbridge, London, England, but spent most of his early life in Australia, where he was taken at the age of four. His father, Patrick McDermott, was born in Ireland, and is a descendant of the McDermott who was King of Munster. His mother, before her marriage, was Annie Massey, granddaughter of Sir James Massey, of Limerick. McDermott received his education at the Jesuit College in Sydney, Australia.

He made his first apearance on the stage at Sydney, with George Rignold, of "Henry V" fame. After remaining with Rignold's company for seven years, he joined Mrs. Patrick Campbell, and was her leading man for five years that followed; two of which were spent in the United States and three touring England. Later, while in England he appeared with Marie Dainton at Wyndham's theatre, London. Returning to the United States, he joined Richard Mansfield's company.

About this time Mr. McDermott became interested in motion pictures and at the instigation of a friend visited the Edison studio, where he was induced to sign a contract.

Arrangements are being made at the Vitagraph plant in Flatbush for the first McDermott picture. To date, the title is not known, but it is said it will be a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, and that he will be supported by an all-star cast of Vitagraphers.

BILLIE BURKE, STAR OF THE GEORGE KLEINE SERIAL, "GLORIA'S ROMANCE," IN SCENES FROM CHAPTER ONE OF THE FILM NOVEL

Board of Trade Directors Confer on Censorship

Killing of Amendment to Cristman-Wheeler Bill at Albany Indicates Desire of Members of Popular Branch of Legislature to Avoid Snap Judgment on Un-American Dogmas

THE board of directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America met in regular session on Thursday, the most important matter for consideration being the report of officers and counsel on pending legislation affecting the motion picture industry.

Executive Secretary Binder said the death of the Ahern bill in the Assembly at Albany, N. Y., proved conclusively that the censorship's efforts of the political reformers and place-holders in this state had failed. The Cristman-Wheeler bill, which was jockeyed through the Senate for the purpose of giving local capital to some of the members of that body, will come up in the Assembly this week.

One amendment to this measure has been killed already which, according to William M. Seabury, general counsel of the board, indicates that the popular branch of the legislature will not take snap judgment on a proposition which is held by many to be unconstitutional and is admittedly undemocratic and un-American.

While Governor Whitman has made no official expression, it is believed that he is opposed by principle to any pre-publicity censorship in this State whether of motion pictures, the newspaper press or the public rostrum.

The Maryland censorship bill, slipped through the Senate at 2:30 o'clock on the closing night, came up for a hearing Monday morning, April 10, at 11 o'clock. The motion picture industry was represented by P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; J. W. Binder and William M. Seabury, of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America; Guy L. Wonders, of Baltimore, and the full force of the Maryland Exhibitors' League. Speakers from the American Federation of Labor and the Maryland labor organizations will be present also. Constitutional points against the bill are now before the governor.

The board of directors decided on a tentative program for the First National Motion Picture Exhibition, to be held at Madison Square Garden, May 6-14, inclusive. Letters were read from exhibitors' leagues of six states, wherein it was stated that these leagues would be fully represented at the exposition.

Arrangements were made for participation by the Board of Trade in the meeting of the General Federation of Womens' Clubs here next month, at which seventy-five thousand women from all parts of the country will be present. Samuel L. Rothapfel, one of the exhibitors' directors of the board, will provide at his Rialto theatre a model entertainment for the visitors on the morning of the opening of the convention.

This entertainment will be followed by others on several other mornings during the progress of the great meeting. For the showing of pictures in the convention hall, Director Nicholas Power of the board will supply a projecting machine of the newest pattern as one of the industry's contributions.

The proposed ball of the Buffalo Screen Club was approved.

D. F. Featherston, general organizer of the American Federation of Labor, in company with two representatives of the New York carpenter's union, appeared before the board for a discussion of the general proposition to unionize the carpenters employed in the motion picture industry.

Nothing in the form of an ultimatum was presented and the conference was entirely friendly in character. The discussion was adjourned until a later date when Samuel Gompers and Mr. Featherston will bring forward data in reference to the wage situation in New York, California and Florida.

SCREEN ENGAGEMENT OVER, EDESON RETURNS TO "LEGITIMATE"

Robert Edeson, who has just concluded his engagement with the Vitagraph Company, during which time he appeared in a number of feature pictures, will return to the legitimate stage in several weeks, under the management of A. H. Woods.

Mr. Edeson's vehicle is a drama entitled "The Dawn," written by George Parker. The piece will have a preliminary season on tour before coming to New York, opening in Atlantic City April 24.

Mr. Edeson has recently been starred in "Mortmain," "The Cave Man" and "For a Woman's Fair Name."

"Screen Logical Medium of Thought Expression"

Billie Burke, Star of the Serial, "Gloria's Romance," from Kleine, Says She Likes Acting in Photodrama, and Considers It Form of Original Literature

BILLIE BURKE, star of the serial "Gloria's Romance," which George Kleine is producing from a new novel by Rupert Hughes, admits that she likes acting in the photodrama decidedly.

Interviewed at the Kleine studios in New York, Miss Burke said, in reply to the question, "Do you like playing in pictures better than acting on the speaking stage?":

"I cannot answer that without explaining. If you were to ask me, 'Do you like playing in the new Rupert Hughes picture?,' I should say, emphatically, 'yes'! You see, they have made things so pleasant for me here that I cannot feel otherwise. We have a wonderful mission and we are carrying it out in the most thorough way.

"It is our intention to create a form of original literature on the screen. That means that we will convey to the masses throughout the world a work of literature in pictorial form. We believe that the screen is a logical medium for thought expression and we are trying to make the most of it. Mr. Hughes has written a splendid scenario and we are now enacting it.

"To answer your question properly I must compare. Last year I toured the country in 'Jerry.' I had to travel constantly. My evenings did not belong to me. It was enervating work. For this production I am mostly in New York. I am not required to give up my evenings. My surroundings are pleasant, and this picture-play will go out to millions I have never been able to reach. When I think it over I really believe that I am slightly partial to pictures."

Asked if she would ever return to the "legitimate" stage, Miss Burke replied:

"Of course, I have postponed an engagement to play in Hall Caine's 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me' and I shall begin rehearsals for that as soon as this picture is completed. But you may say that I like the movies—or, rather, the photodrama—decidedly."

IVY CLOSE, ENGLISH BEAUTY, MAY BE PERMANENT SCREEN STAR

Reports from England have it that Ivy Close, well-known on the British stage, and famous for her beauty, may in the near future yield to the lures of motion picture manufacturers and allow her much-praised beauty to grace the screen.

Miss Close came into prominence a few years ago when she was declared "the most beautiful woman in the world" as the result of winning the Chicago Tribune-London Mirror contest in which over 60,000 contestants were entered. She holds the rare distinction of having been the subject for a Royal Academy prize winner, A. R. Hackett, A. R. A., being the painter.

IVY CLOSE

Among the distinguished judges who declared Miss Close the classic type of beauty in the Tribune-Mirror contest were Sir James Linton, R. I.; John Lavery, R. S. A.; John Hassall, R. I.; and A. Carruthers-Gould, R. B. A.

Aside from her beauty, however, Miss Close has gained prominence on the English stage, being a London favorite in comedy. Following the habit of English stars to "take a try at the cinematograph," Miss Close a year or so ago made successful appearances in a few feature films.

Ruth Stonehouse the Star in Rest of "Peg" Chapters

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard No Longer in Cast of Universal Serial—Either G. Raymond Nye or Eddie Polo Probably Picked for Leading Role

MATERIAL changes have been made in the producing forces at Universal City which will affect the future output of the company in no small measure. The "Peg o' the Ring" serial, the first five chapters of which have been completed with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in the leading roles, will advance in further episodes with Ruth Stonehouse as Peg supported by an all-star circus cast.

The services of Mr. Ford and Miss Cunard have been dispensed with, with the completion of the fifth instalment. Jacques Jaccard will take up the duties of directing the last ten numbers of the serial, while Miss Stonehouse will appear as an aerial artist. The story is to be altered slightly, but will dove-tail with the former numbers in entirely convincing style.

Mr. Jaccard has been obliged to forsake his Western company headed by Harry Carey and Olive Fuller Golden, but this pair will continue to appear in two-reel dramas, in all probability under the direction of Mr. Carey himself.

Olga Printzlau and Mr. Jaccard will continue with the preparation of the stories and scenario for the "Peg o' the Ring" pictures. Miss Stonehouse, it is understood, holds a year's contract with Universal and she arrived in Universal City on Sunday, the second of April, and began working the next day.

Miss Stonehouse has for the past several years been with the Essanay company, as a star, and she appeared in a number of that company's most successful releases.

The new story for "Peg o' the Ring" has Peg as an aerial artist, loved by Durant, a young acrobat, and a clown of the circus is thought to be her father. An accident occurs in which the clown is fatally injured, and before his death he explains to the acrobat that Peg will be the real owner of the circus when she attains her majority.

This information is overheard by "Big Bill" Matthews, supposed owner of the show, and he attempts to induce Peg to marry him. Repulsed he employs a roustabout of the circus to attempt her life. The acrobat is occupied by preventing this throughout the great part of the serial and at last becomes the husband of the girl after the villains have been disposed of.

Miss Stonehouse's early career was that of a professional dancer. She has been appearing before the camera for the past six years, having joined the Essanay company in 1910. Miss Stonehouse is an all-around athlete, numbering among her accomplishments swimming, driving a car and appearing perfectly at home on horseback.

In addition to this she is well versed in classic dances and this talent will certainly show to good effect in the prominent part she is to play.

At present no leading man has been chosen for Miss Stonehouse, but it is thought that either G. Raymond Nye or Eddie Polo, both accomplished players, will be placed opposite her. Charles Gunn and Pete Gerald, who have already appeared in the first five numbers, will continue in the second edition of the new serial.

WARDE SIGNS LONG CONTRACT WITH THANHOUSER

Frederick Warde, tragedian and Shakespearian lecturer, the star of the Thanhouser-Mutual production of "Silas Mar-

ner," has affixed his name to a long term contract with the Thanhouser forces, and will be seen in a series of five-reel features, to be known as Thanhouser Classics.

The contract means, it is announced, that Mr. Warde wil be seen in eight classic productions a year, and it is expected that his plays will be selected for screen adaptation from the repertoire of material in which he has been seen on the legitimate stage. Ernest Warde, son of the tragedian, will continue to direct his father.

THREE PRETTY POSES OF DORIS KENYON, THE WORLD-EQUITABLE FILM STAR

Paul A. Bush, general manager of the United Photo-Plays Company, Chicago, has had a thorough schooling in motion pictures from studio to office.

Starting some years ago with the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures, he has in turn held responsible positions with Jones, Linick and Schaffer, Pathé and the Chicago Tribune. For a time he was sales manager of the Pacific Coast branch for the American Tobacco Company, and the knowledge gained with the latter company fulfilled his wish to complete the last details of the film business, namely, the exploiting. With such knowledge he accepted the position of general manager of the United Photo-Plays Company, and the concern within the very near future will start making one picture a month, to be released in one of the larger programs.

Mr. Bush has owned and operated three film exchanges, besides acting as special representative for Henry W. Savage's picture, "Uncle Sam at Work."

MAGAZINE EDITOR TO SIFT FICTION FOR FAMOUS PLAYERS SCRIPT MATERIAL

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, following out his determination to sift thoroughly the best grade of modern fiction for motion picture purposes, has engaged H. R. Durant, a well-known magazine writer and scenarioist, and placed him in charge of the editorial department.

Mr. Durant, besides having written more than two hundred short stories, served with great success as editor of the All Story Magazine for five years, and in addition is the author of several successful plays and vaudeville offerings.

He has also written many photoplays for the Reliance-Majestic, Equitable, Fine Arts, Mirror and Famous Players organizations, and, it is said, knows personally more of the newer school of fiction writers than any other man in America.

Engel Boosts Jacksonville as Film-Making Center

Treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation, Returned from Tour of Southern States and a Flying Trip to Cuba, Sees South Gaining in Popularity Over California

"MOTION picture production is headed East, and the big feature producers will incline more and more to the Atlantic seaboard as against California." This is the declaration of Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of the Metro Pictures Corporation, who has just returned from a tour of the Southern states and a flying trip to Cuba. In a talk at the Metro offices in the Long Acre Building, Mr. Engel gave as his reasons for this view the following:

"I am willing to hazard a good guess that the big features which cannot be made in the North during the winter months will, in a majority of cases, before very long be produced in Florida, especially in Jacksonville. During a three weeks' trip, which combined business and pleasure, I had an opportunity to see Jacksonville at close range, and to note its advantage over California as a production center.

"To begin with, the people of Jacksonville, led by such men as Telfair Stockton W. R. Carter and J. J. Logan, were enterprising enough to send a committee, appointed by the mayor, to New York, to tell of Jacksonville's possibilities to the motion picture concerns here. And they did not stop there.

"They secured from local merchants and other business people, including the hotels and transportation companies, full co-operation, so that our companies who have gone down there have received the best of everything, and have found, in addition to an ideal climate, wonderful scenery, plenty of metropolitan locations, a really sympathetic and helpful co-operation from every element of the social and business life of Jacksonville.

"When we consider that this is only a night and a day from New York by train, and an easy journey by boat, we know that we have near the great marketing center for pictures the most satisfactory picture-making proposition that I have ever seen. It stands to reason, therefore, that with these added attractions, and the co-operation that the Coast has never given the picture people, that California being farther away is far less desirable from every point of view.

"As far as I am concerned, I believe that all the picture people in the East will take so kindly to Jacksonville, St. Augustine and Atlantic Beach that next winter will see most of the big companies making pictures there rather than in California."

Mr. Engel, in speaking of motion picture theatre conditions in the South, said: "I found everywhere a motion picture awakening, with splendid new theatres going up and popular enthusiasm over pictures of the better class. The theatres in the South today compare favorably with the very best in the country."

Mr. Engel found conditions in Cuba radically changed; in that stage pictures have been put out of business by the Havana newspapers, and "tobasco" films are no longer shown. "Within thirty days," said Mr. Engel, "several representatives of capital are coming to New York to get the latest ideas in modern picture houses."

"Battle Cry" Is Trumpet Call to His Box Office

Manager in Masontown, Population 950, Books "V" Patriotic Picture for House Seating 300 and in One Day 1,600 Attend, Making 700 More Than Town's Inhabitants

THAT the V-L-S-E production, "The Battle Cry of Peace," continues to prove a box-office attraction, is made manifest by the telegrams and letters received daily at V-L-S-E headquarters from exhibitors throughout the country, as illustrated by the experience of an exhibitor in Masontown, Pa. The population of Masontown is given as 950, and the seating capacity of the theatre is 300 people. Recently the manager of the theatre booked "The Battle Cry of Peace" for one day, at more than double the price he had ever paid for any other production. He also arranged for the services of a ten-piece orchestra to furnish suitable music for the feature, and announced a price schedule of from 25 to 75 cents admission.

Despite the advanced scale of charges the house experienced the greatest run ever listed in its history. The close of each performance found an impatient crowd waiting in line for the chance to enter, and at the conclusion of the final showing an official estimate set the attendance for one day at 1,600, or 700 more than the community's total population.

"The Battle Cry" is booked for one day at the Grange theatre, Cashmere, Washington, under date of April 10. The population of Cashmere is 600, and the house accommodates 590 people. On March 21, R. M. Parrish, manager of the Grange, called up the Seattle branch office of the V-L-S-E over the long distance telephone, stated that the entire house for April 10 was sold out and asked to book the feature for two additional days.

PARAMOUNT BRINGS OUT ARTISTIC ONE SHEET POSTERS

Accompanying all of the single-reel subjects that are being issued by the Paramount Pictures Corporation are poster one-sheets, the work of well-known designers and colorists.

The short-reel subjects of Paramount are the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, the Paramount Pictographs, the Paramount-Bray Cartoons, and the Bray-Gilbert Silhouettes.

The designs were made by the following artists, and have attracted a great deal of attention: "Farmer Al-Falfa Invents a New Kite," by Cory Kalvert; "Inbad the Sailor Gets Into Deep Water," by C. B. Falls; "Bobby Bumps Gets a Substitute," by Cory Kelvert; and the Paramount Pictograph Poster, by Gil-Spear.

Marks of Strand, New York, Out for Censorship

Believes in Pictures with Plenty of Action That Stir the Blood, Pictures That Appeal to Finer and Artistic Senses, Pictures That Educate and Uplift

We must, however, correct his assertion that no exhibitors were present at the federal censorship hearings in Washington. As a matter of fact, thirty-seven exhibitors were there, though Mr. Mark was not, and though Mr. Mark had every opportunity to be present. It is also significant that every exhibitor who attended the hearings was absolutely opposed to censorship of any kind.]

"DURING a recent hearing at Washington, D. C., on federal control of motion pictures, the industry was represented on the firing line solely by producers and their allies.

"Why were not the exhibitors present to give voice to the demands of their patrons? They, of all classes financially interested in this comparatively new and wonderful form of entertainment, are directly and constantly in touch with the pulse of those who have made this business possible—the public.

"For this neglect, we, of course, only have ourselves to blame, but a public expression of opinion on this very important question from the owners and operators of the Strand theatre, New York, may and should be quite timely and interest every exhibitor who has the good of the business at heart as well as the manufacturers of the films we project on our screens.

"Right off the reel, so to speak, we believe in interesting pictures that leave a good taste in the mouth, pictures with plenty of action that stir the red blood in our veins, pictures that appeal to the finer and artistic senses, pictures that educate and uplift, but always, always clean, moral pictures. That is the rock on which the future prosperity of our business is built.

"Follow any other course, and in a comparatively short time the rock will be split and the crevices filled with many dead exhibitors. Is it not a fact in the amusement line that the largest rewards invariably come to those who spread a clean, palatable bill of fare before their patrons. Can anyone recall a single instance of a popular form of entertainment that owes its prosperity to catering to the lower and debasing element of human nature. No one can controvert the above facts.

"The wave of vampire and sex pictures which has swept over the country in the past year is bound to react and result in great harm to the entire industry unless checked very quickly. The prosperity of theatres specializing in this form of entertainment is temporary and evanescent. Censorship intelligently applied is the remedy for this evil and the safeguard for our continued existence. This censorship should emanate from the Federal Government and should not by any means consist of politicians whose livelihood depends upon the votes of their constituents, but of those who have worldly experience, people of large and liberal ideas, men of business, of letters, artists and dramatists. Care should be exercised in eliminating the narrow minded and the bigot.

"Are we not all protected under censorship of that description? Should we not consider it a blessing that our business is safeguarded by trained and discriminate minds? Under such conditions and with such authorities confronting them, the petty annoyance of state and local censorship should vanish—in fact, in course of time, these lesser boards should pass out of existence for want of sustenance.

"That the industry has brought censorship upon itself admits of no argument. Given free rein, a certain class of manufacturers would cast prudence and caution to the four winds of heaven, salaciousness would run rampant, and discredit would be cast upon the entire industry—the good suffering for the sins of the bad. If the exhibitor insists upon clean, moral pictures, the manufacturers will be compelled to furnish that class of material. The business must be purged of its unhealthy odor. Censorship, properly applied, will accomplish this.

"I hope that this expression of opinion will be the means of bringing forth the sentiments of the better class of exhibitors. It is the duty of each and every one of them to put themselves on record for federal censorship as outlined above."

Dustin Farnum in Two "David" Roles for Pallas

Star Will be Seen Shortly in "Crockett" and "Garrick," Widely Different in Subject with Never Ending Appeal to the Public

DUSTIN FARNUM will be presented on the screen shortly in the title role of two well-known subjects, "David Garrick" and "Davy Crockett." Although Garrick and Crockett were both baptized "David," these two personages, as is well known, are widely different characters, all of which affords Dustin Farnum particular opportunity to display his rare versatility.

DUSTIN FARNUM AND WINIFRED KINGSTON IN "DAVID GARRICK" (Pallas); (Center) FARNUM AS DAVY CROCKETT

For over half a century "David Garrick" has been repeatedly produced on the stage until it has become internationally known as a classic of the drama. In 1864 it was first presented in England with E. A. Sothern in the title character. The success of this comedy in England has more than been duplicated here, its initial appearance in this country having been presented with George C. Boniface at the Kelly and Leon Theatre, New York, on March 8, 1872. Among the noted actors who have starred in this play are Lawrence Barrett, Sir Charles Wyndham, both E. A. and E. H. Sothern, Nat Goodwin, Thomas Salvini and others of equal fame.

The Pallas Pictures Company, fully realizing the important position "David Garrick" occupies in the annals of the theatre, has devoted every facility of its extensive plant toward the preservation of this classic for all times. In filming the play under the direction of Frank Lloyd, the producers have hesitated at no expense, time or effort in an endeavor to give the subject a fitting screen version.

The costumes are exact duplicates of several extravagant heirlooms of the period and the sets are the result of consultations with authorities on the subject. One of the features of the photoplay is a full sized reproduction of the stage and clusters of candles were used in place of the present footlights. A replica of Drury Lane itself has been faithfully produced.

In "Davy Crockett," Frank Mayo's story of a hundred years ago, Dustin Farnum offers another characterization of a historical personage. Under the direction of William D. Taylor, director of "He Fell in Love With His Wife" and other screen successes, this production is nearing its completion at the Pallas Pictures studios in Los Angeles. Several important scenes for this subject were staged in the San Bernardino Mountains, where activities were delayed for eight days, when the entire company became snowbound. Other scenes for this famous subject were filmed in and about the colonial estate of Hancock Banning in Wilmington, a small West coast town.

In both "David Garrick" and "Davy Crockett," Winifred Kingston appears in the principal supporting role opposite Dustin Farnum. Herbert Standing, the veteran English character, who has just recovered from an accident, also appears in support of the star in both photoplays, which will be seen on the Paramount Program shortly.

Screen Examinations

"SALVATION JOAN"

(Special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon-V-L-S-E—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

EDNA MAY makes her first screen appearance in this Salvation Army-detective story, and leaves upon the spectator the impression that he has seen a remarkably dignified, a genuinely pleasing personality in action on the celluloid. Not the least gratifying thing about Miss May is her command of quiet emotion; her restraint; her complete avoidance of cheap acting—of which there is altogether too much on the screen.

That is to say, her work is of undoubted appeal, not so much because of what she does as the way she does it. There is no doubt either that the character selected by Vitagraph for Miss May is one admirably suited to her, and one which hardly could be essayed so well by any other actress.

Without detracting in the slightest from the work of the star, and of the uniformly good cast which surrounds her, it may be said that the task of all of these has been made unnecessarily difficult by the length of the picture. Much of the early action is slow. There is considerable padding and a number of scenes which do not help along the story materially. Often Miss May is compelled to stand and pose for several minutes in order to round out a scene which could easily be omitted or shortened. These are her least effective moments, but even these are not wholly unacceptable because it is a real pleasure to look at Miss May.

But if the first three reels move slowly, the same cannot be said of the other four. On the contrary, suspense is built up gradually in these, until a genuine surprise is reached at the denouement. The surprise comes in the revelation of the identity of "Bill," who hitherto had been supposed to be merely a slum character in love with Joan. In the home of Joan (who in reality is a society woman), Bill appears at a ball, to carry out a bargain with Ralston, a foreign spy, in whose pay he is supposed to be. After a series of exciting scenes, Bill, in his true character of secret service man, prevents Ralston from securing important diplomatic papers the possession of which would have led to war, arrests him, and thus saves the country.

Then Joan and Bill find they love each other just as sincerely as they did when he knew her only as a Salvation Army worker, and she knew him as a gangster worth redeeming.

The introduction of this surprise—few will guess it until its near approach—strengthens the action immensely, and figures in the final excellent effect.

In other respects also it is a thoroughly good picture. A strong element of heart interest is gained through the subplot in which Joan's sister, a weak wife, falls unwittingly into the clutches of Ralston, while her husband is away on a diplomatic mission. Her indiscretion is going to his apartments late at night later ties Joan's hands when Joan wishes to betray Ralston's identity and thus save her country from the danger brought about by his machinations against it. Joan decides to shield her sister, and eventually her decision is justified, for Ralston is shot and killed in an attempt to escape after his arrest. The secret is thus kept from the sister's husband.

The supporting cast was carefully selected. Harry T. Morey does fine work as Bill; L. Rogers Lytton, in a role similar to his "spy" part in "The Battle Cry of Peace," is equally good; Dorothy Kelly, as the weak wife, and Donald Hall, as her husband, are thoroughly acceptable. There is also Bobby Connelly, whose presence makes possible several little touches of "child stuff," which picturegoers always like. A large number of extras, among whom appear such well-known Vitagraphers as Eulalie Jensen and Belle Bruce are used in two or three scenes.

In the best Vitagraph style, the picture has been produced by Wilfred North, who worked from a script by Marguerite Bertsch. The locations and sets in the slum scenes are right, and the types well picked. The lighting throughout is very good. The scenes in Joan's home bring to view rich interiors, and the picture is otherwise fully equipped.

"THE RACE"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

CAPITAL has been made of Anita King's recent coast-to-coast automobile trip, as the "Paramount Girl," for a thrilling five-reel subject. A lot of exciting scenes have been provided, some of them actually taken during Anita's journey, and Hector Turnbull and Clinton Stagg have provided a good story to weave them together.

The subject is, to say the least, out of the ordinary. The camera has looked out on unusual views, and the whole atmosphere of the piece is different from what one usually gets.

The story revolves around the affairs of young Jimmy Grayson, son of a millionaire automobile manufacturer, who has spent his income enthusiastically and finds himself with three weeks in which to make good on a $10,000 check, or go to jail. So he gets a

TO THE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA:-

Hereafter my name appears on no picture-play which I do not supervise personally.

From start to finish what you see from now on in World Pictures is mine.

For sometime past, I have loaned my stage plays to others for production, and my name went with them. But this has been a vast mistake. I commence to see that it was undermining my work of the past twenty-five years.

You have seen picture-plays which bore my name. Undoubtedly many of them made money for you. But henceforth when my name is on a picture, it means that I have chosen the scenario and supervised the production myself clear to the release.

Mr. Lee Shubert, Vice-President of the World Film Corporation, has brought about many changes which I insisted upon before I consented to give my own time and efforts to World Pictures. It is now possible for me to produce picture-plays of a higher standard - plays which I believe will mean a new day in Filmland.

We are announcing all our plans in an advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post, a copy of which you will see on the next pages. This announcement affects you personally, because we tell frankly just what has happened and just what it will mean to the motion picture industry.

I hope you will read this advertisement carefully so that you may be posted and know what to expect.

Then read about our great line-up of stars and our coming releases.

Yours truly,

William A. Brady

Wm A. BRADY
Announces—
To Theatre Goers

Six weeks ago today I became Director-General of the World Film Corporation. And on that date all the talent and all the resources of two great organizations—the World and the Equitable—were combined.

From now on, I supervise PERSONALLY every World Picture Play from start to finish. Please do not think that I am lending my name—I am giving myself. I bring to motion pictures the experience I acquired in the past twenty-five years in the dramatic world.

This means to me a new ambition—I believe a new career. I am here to establish new standards.

"We must leave the beaten path", I said to Mr. Shubert. "Our prestige, our futures, are at stake. Here is our supreme chance for a greater place than ever."

When I consented to enter personally into the production of feature pictures, I demanded in exchange many conditions which are bound to create new artistic values.

I am convinced that there has been and still is an over-production of mediocre pictures. Quantity, not quality, has been the custom. Over-strain has robbed Art.

Scenario writers, directors, actors and photographers, everywhere must have more time, so as to put better craftsmanship into their work.

For this is truly an Art, not an industry. And creative art of any sort cannot be put on purely manufacturing basis.

Now the most talented actors and directors of two great companies have been united—giving me, I believe, a most remarkable opportunity to express, in every detail, what I consider the utmost in this art.

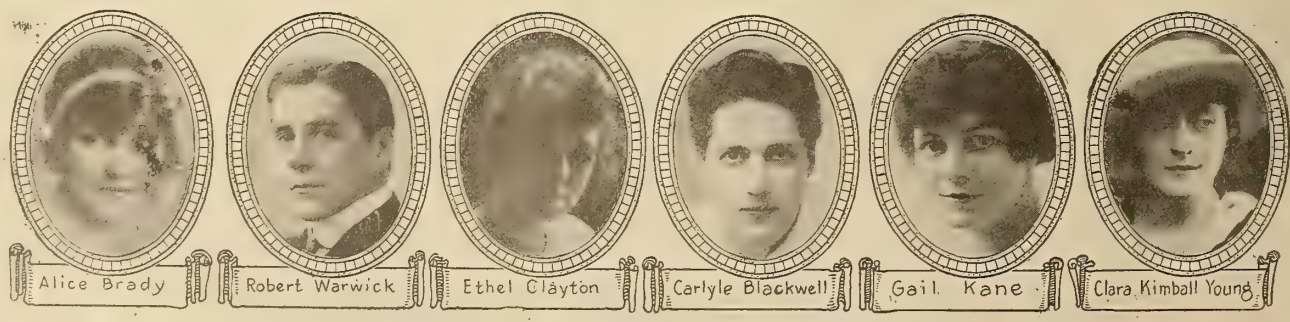
I shall now produce but one picture a week. To do this, I have at my command the artistic and financial resources formerly used by two leading companies which made two good pictures a week. As in my stage plays, I will now be able to put into World Pictures nice handling, unusual treatment, infinite pains.

Around me are gathered such master players as Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell, Gail Kane, Ethel Clayton, House Peters, Frances Nelson, Holbrook Blinn, Muriel Ostriche, Clara Whipple and Mollie King.

To assist me are directors of the highest calibre, such as Maurice Tourneur, Albert Cappallani, Frank Crane, Emile Chautard, John Ince, Barry O'Neill, Edwin August, S. E. V. Taylor. I do not know of any group where so much dramatic experience is combined as in this one. Each man has great successes to his credit. Every World Picture is bound to be a study in technique.

So now I am surrounded by one organization which permits me to carry out my most cherished plans on a large scale and establish those standards which I feel must finally prevail throughout the realm of silent drama.

The World Pictures now being released are the first of my new-day productions. These plays typify those standards which have led me to success. They are clean plays and gripping, heart-touching and real. In them and in their presentations you'll find my highest conception of real dramatic art.



Thousands of theatres are showing my new productions. Go and see them. On your verdict I will either rise or fall.

LEE SHUBERT
Announces—
To Exhibitors

Mr Wm. A. Brady, in producing World Pictures, opens up a new Photo-Play epoch.

He now brings to the screen all of h s high ideals, all of his ability as a director and all his ambition to win the friendship of a larger audience.

This means for the silent drama the same high standards he attained in spoken drama. It brings to the picture plays new interest, new respect. World Pictures, from this time on, will occupy a plane of their own.

Famous names have heretofore been loaned to screen productions. But now for the first time a producer of first magnitude takes personal charge.

When Mr. Brady consented to become Director-General of World Pictures, his first aim was for fewer pictures, because fewer pictures means better pictures. He demanded the following conditions.

(1) Concentrated efforts. He rebelled at over-production and spreading out artistic and financial resources. Mr. Brady insisted that we temporarily discontinue Equitable Pictures and trasfer all their resources to World Pictures—thus uniting for the present two great companies.

(2) More artistic talent. Mr. Brady exacted that, without losing any of their own artists and experts, World Pictures should gain all the famous actors, all the wealth of plays, all the seasoned directors, and all the photographic genius formerly belonging to Equitable Pictures.

(3) Plenty of time. Mr. Brady maintained that it was artistically impossible to produce master-plays under forced schedules. World and Equitable formerly produced 104 picture plays yearly. Now the united forces work with less strain and more time thus giving time for real creative work.

(4) Unlimited finances. Mr. Brady has been given free rein. Every dollar necessary for unhampered productions is available. His artistic resources are unlimited.

Mr. Brady now predicts the very summit in histrionic art, and I, appreciating the changes which have taken place, stake my own dramatic place on that prediction.

This is but the initial announcement of our new policy. There will soon be a universal desire to see plays produced by Mr. Brady. The public will quickly awake to these new standards and the theatre world will applaud them.

Several new Brady-made plays are now ready for release. These plays are certain to popularize the theatres which show them.

May I urge those progressive exhibitors controlling the better-class theatres who wish to please their patrons at once with the new Brady-made productions, to telegraph me immediately or fill out the coupon below and mail it in a special delivery envelope to me personally.

Of course in every community we will have to adopt the rule—"First come, first served" That is why I suggest telegraphing so that one of my representatives may be sent to you without delay.

What Mr. Brady's Letter and Our Advertisement Means To You

We want to take you behind the scenes and talk to you frankly.

First let us say that, as a direct result of the recent re-organization of the World Film Corporation, remarkable changes have taken place which will interest and affect every exhibitor. Maybe you have heard rumors. Here are the facts.

The advertisement just shown announces but the first of a number of important happenings which have occurred, and others which will take place. They will be unfolded to you from time to time. Our new policy does not permit us to feed you promises.

Now Comes the Show-Down

So we come to you now as man to man and lay our cards on the table.

That two-page advertisement shown to the right, when stripped of the language necessary in an advertisement appearing in a general publication, means simply this:

(1) Wm. A. Brady has become Director-General of World Pictures.

(2) The World Film Corporation has absorbed the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation—the program of the latter being discontinued temporarily.

(3) Without losing any of its own stars, directors or resources, World Pictures have gained all the stars, directors and resources of Equitable Pictures.

(4) In uniting these great forces under Mr. Brady's personal supervision, the World Film Corporation can safely predict pictures of a higher standard—not merely compared with its own past productions, but compared with any program.

(5) Exhibitors who have longed for a dependable program may now obtain it by contracting for World Pictures.

Performances Instead of Promises

Since the reorganization of the World Film Corporation, you know that we have not given a single promise that has not been fulfilled. And this concern will make no future promises—but actually perform first. Mr. Brady has convinced us all that the whole industry must be placed on a firm, substantial basis. We are going to do our part.

WORLD PICTURES

Wm. A. BRADY Director General

Please mention MOTION

The reorganization of the World Film Corporation was brought about because we realized that some one company would have to strike out and do away with the conditions that have existed. The directors and officers of the World Film Corporation have anticipated the revolution which is certain to come quickly throughout the industry.

Our goods speak for themselves. We are marketing a standardized product and we are perfectly willing to let the merit of this product either make or break us. And this is the only way that any true success can be attained by any concern. You know that.

Old Methods Must Go

We are perfectly willing and anxious to be the first ones to confess that the reason you have not been getting better pictures is because motion picture plays have been produced on a wrong basis. Real acting cannot be put on a fast time schedule. Plays cannot be manufactured like automobiles.

We have called a halt in our organization by doing away with over-production. If others would do the same the whole art of the silent drama would be greatly improved and all of us would make more money, at the same time giving the people greater satisfaction.

We Cut Our Schedule in Two

The World Film Corporation has been scheduling 104 World and Equitable Pictures a year. But now we see that it was a wrong policy and we have stopped it. For the stage, Mr. Brady says that it is artistically impossible for him or any other producer to create yearly 104 dramatic successes. And likewise he says that it is utterly foolish to attempt 104 film successes a year. You have seen the result, you know what you have been getting. Common sense tells you that a breakneck pace kills quality.

Standardization Will Win

It is now possible for us to create a new average of excellence. And we can hold this average of excellence at a place where we can safely say that every World Picture is a dependable picture. We mean by this a picture which you, Mr. Exhibitor, can rely upon to please a larger number of your patrons.

Mr. Brady shares with you and your patrons supreme disgust for poor picture plays. He is working for that same sort of revolution which signalized his advent into the stage world. For twenty-five years Mr. Brady has studied the public and he knows just what appeals to folks.

He can select from twelve great stars instead of six, as is the usual case. Without losing any of its own stars, World gains all the stars which belonged to Equitable.

Permanent Stars on the World Program

And the best of it all is that the stars shown here are on long-time contracts with the World Film Corporation and each will appear regularly at intervals. You will not have any of these stars for only one picture. A system of rotation is in effect so that in every fifth or sixth picture a star will appear again.

Your patrons will come to know and like Mr. Brady's casts. In a way, Mr. Brady has a stock company of players and in many pictures he will use more than one star.

Complete Cast Carefully Selected

You have seen many pictures which were "star-heavy"—with a great star and a cheap company. You won't see this in World Pictures under Mr. Brady's supervision. He has long been noted in the stage world as one who insists on excellent casts, from the star to the smallest parts.

With twice as much ability at hand, Mr. Brady is able to select for each picture play a splendid group of actors who can interpret his ideas sympathetically. Straight into pictures will be brought all the fine acting of the better stage plays. And every one of the World stars has a tremendous following. Look them over and think how it will increase your attendance when you can offer such favorites regularly.

The First of the Brady-made Pictures Are Now Ready for Release

Greater Satisfaction for Your Patrons

All the art of the drama is now brought into pictures by Mr. Brady. He has twice as many plays to choose from, twice as many actors, twice as many directors, twice as many photographers, and in fact throughout the production of World Pictures, there is now doubled equipment. There is more time to think out details, more time for rehearsals, more time to arrange settings, more time for finer acting.

The moving picture public wants most of all dependable pictures. People want to be assured, when they make up their minds to go to the theatre, that they will not see an inferior production. They want the average to be higher than it has been in the past.

You Can Steadily Increase the Attendance

Because of better dramas, more great stars and our national advertising campaign, people will want to see World Pictures produced by Mr. Brady.

From now on a contract for World Pictures gives you positive assurance of a highly dependable program, with an unmatchable average of excellence. You can face your patrons with more confidence.

From One Showman to Another

A Message from Lee Shubert

You know, as well as I do, that your and my success depends on winning the public.

Through all my years of experience I have realized that what money I make depends on how great a following I can get. To get a greater following, one has to give people something a little bit better than that offered by the other fellow.

Great show successes always depend on the ability of some one man to read the public's mind and to touch the hearts of the masses and the classes alike. This also makes him a great business man.

You cannot dispute the fact that Mr. Brady has been successful. Mr. Brady never put on a stage play in his life without the sort of human interest that reaches all classes.

So I bank on his selecting for World Pictures the kind of plays which will appeal to the largest number of people. And he is staging these plays properly and including favorite stars.

Mr. Brady brought startling innovations into the Stage World, and I know that he will do the same in Filmland.

I am firmly convinced that Brady-made pictures will draw the biggest crowds. They are neither cheap thrillers nor too highbrow—neither one extreme nor the other. This means the greatest possible pulling power for you.

As one showman to another—both of us being interested in making more money and safeguarding our investments—my advice to you is this: Do not run the risk of losing this great opportunity to secure Brady-made pictures. Don't hesitate. Don't wait. You will win out if you act at once.

Sign that blank today and mail it to me personally so that we can get in touch with you at once. Remember, "first come, first served."

VICTOR MOORE AND ANITA KING IN "THE RACE," A NEW LASKY PRODUCTION FOR PARAMOUNT RELEASE

job as chauffeur. He meets Grace Van Dyke, "chauffeuress," whose father—a clerk for Grayson, senior, and an unsuccessful inventor—has embezzled $9,000, and is also given three weeks in which to make good.

Grayson and his business rivals, the Duplex Company, start an ocean-to-ocean race by automobile. Young Grayson pilots his father's car and Grace is engaged to pilot the Duplex, the prize for the winner to be $10,000. In each case the money will come just in time to save someone from going to jail.

Neither of the big companies fights fair. They telegraph their agents along the road to do everything possible to hold up their rival, and the race is a series of mishaps, until young Grayson discovers that he is driving against a girl, and who she is.

Near the finish Grace is the victim of foul play, and her car dashes off the abutment of a broken bridge into the chasm below. There Grayson finds her, and realizing that she must lose the race because of trickery he smashes the engine of his own car. Grace is cared for, recovers and repairs her car; then she tows the young man's machine across the finish line.

She gets the $10,000 and he goes to jail; but the same night she gets word from her father that the invention has succeeded and has been purchased; so she turns the check over to Grayson and saves him from a prison term.

Victor Moore is delightful as Grayson, and Anita King is a pleasing figure as the "chauffeuress." Robert Bradbury, William Dale, Mrs. Louis McCord, Ernest Joy and Horace B. Carpenter complete the cast.

"THE SHADOW OF DOUBT"

(Equitable-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, a popular hero, makes his second appearance in Equitable pictures in "The Shadow of Doubt." Mr. Blackwell is Ned, a destitute man unable to get work and unable to discover his brother who has prospered as a criminal lawyer.

Forced to join a band of bank robbers in order that he may have money to buy medical attention for his sick wife, Ned is caught by the police and is jailed. Released, Alice, the wife of Randolph, Ned's brother, gives him the helping hand. Her husband is not in sympathy with her activities in assisting ex-convicts to make good and will not give Alice the money for an operation on Ned's wife, so the firm young lady borrows from Collins, the villain.

The operation is successful; Alice secures Ned a place in her husband's employ. But Randolph discovers his past and has him discharged. Collins demands payment of money or payment of self from Alice and Ned volunteers to rob Randolph to pay the debt Alice's kindness to him incurred.

Things come to a head when Randolph enters, has Ned arrested, but at the police station discovers his identity. They return to Alice, who is being beset by Collins. All is explained, the husband forgives, for through his wife's charity he has been united with his brother.

Mr. Blackwell is not the usual romantic hero in this picture and although he plays the part well, a more characteristic vehicle might have been awarded him, for as the lover Mr. Blackwell has few equals.

The story has been presented in a manner that runs over the possibly strong situations of the plot, and tones the whole thing down to one even tenor which is just interesting.

Wray Physioc, who directed, has done just what has been cited in the above. Dramatic force is not prominent in his work. The settings, scenes and light effects as well have been properly and adequately attended to.

ALICE TELLS NED OF THE MONEY

Jean Selby as Alice, George Anderson as Randolph, Frank Beamish as Collins and Lillian Allen complete Mr. Blackwell's support.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS WILL BE USED IN BETTER BABIES CAMPAIGN IN NEW YORK, WEEK OF MAY 6-13

THE campaign on the screen for "Better Babies" that has been conducted by the Paramount Pictures Corporation through the Paramount Pictographs during the past three months throughout the country will be one of the features of the Better Babies Week to be held in New York City during the week of May 6 to 13.

The Paramount people are co-operating in this movement in the country with the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor at Washington, D. C., under the direction of Julia Lathrop; and the Woman's Home Companion, through its editor, Gertrude Lane.

The pictures are taken from material prepared by Dr. Roger Dennett, the eminent infant specialist. In the New York City Better Babies Week, they will co-operate with the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Baby's Welfare Association, the Sage Foundation, and the International Pure Milk and Food Association.

"RAMONA"

(Clune—Three Parts)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

SINCERE and intelligent effort has been directed toward making a great artistic production out of Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel of forty years ago. It has been successful to a marked degree; the twelve thousand odd feet of film contain many a powerful and artistic touch, and scenes as striking as any which have been screened up to date, are provided.

Moreover, from the standpoint of photography, the picture about touches the high water mark—if it does not establish a new standard. If photography is ever perfect, it is so in this subject. In arriving at this result, expert technical work has been supplemented with expert knowledge of lighting, and a keen eye for the artistry of light and shadow. Many of the moving scenes would stand as monuments of photographic art were they merely "still" pictures. Among these are great flocks of sheep, moving slowly and rapidly, scenes of valley, mountain and stream, with the picturesque architecture of southern California. In fact, the picture almost reeks with atmosphere.

It is a trifle unfortunate that in achieving this magnificent result, the director has forgotten his story—that is, from a dramatic standpoint. Ramona, as it is filmed, is simply narrative; the story of the loves and woes of an Indian tribe, and of three individuals in particular. It never rises to heights of dramatic action; there is never a climax; the good old elements of suspense and surprise, without which no audience was ever brought to the edge of its chairs, are absent. In other words, the spectator watches beautiful, finely ordered scenes for nearly three hours, waiting for something to happen, and waiting in vain.

Ramona is not given to us in reels. There is no announcement as to its length in footage. It is divided into three parts, each part portraying a different epoch in the life of Ramona, the Indian girl, who is shown first as a babe, and lastly as a persecuted wife, far up in the mountains where her people are making their last stand against the oncoming tide of white settlers. As presented at the Forty-fourth street theatre, New York, these three parts were divided by allegorical stage grouping, and singing, which enhanced the performance greatly.

Donald Crisp is the director. His work should add appreciably to his laurels, for he has shown a fine understanding of artistic values not often encountered. His grouping of the flocks of sheep, and his use of the light remind one of Corot. His handling of other animals, such as a beautiful sheep dog, and his use of children strike an intensely human note. There are other scenes, great vistas and panoramas, which remind one of Griffith.

The piece has been well cast, and the work of the principals is uniformly excellent. Large bodies of extras have also been handled in convincing manner. Adda Gleason, as Ramona, and Monroe Salisbury, as Alessandro, are both good types, and show good understanding of their parts. This is true of the remainder of the company also, but these two stand out conspicuously.

The story of Ramona is old. It need not be repeated here, except to recall that it is a story of the wrongs of the Indians in early frontier days. Ramona, a half-breed Indian girl, is married to one of her own people. The two are pursued from one town to another, by the encroaching whites, and finally the husband is killed. A former sweetheart then appears, marries Ramona, and takes her away to Mexico City, where their persecutions are over.

The cast is immense. In it are Mabel Van Buren, Richard Sterling, N. de Brullier, Lurline Lyons, Hubert Whitehead, Arthur Tavares, H. M. Best, Alice Morton Otten, Princess Red Wing, Little Anna Lehr, Naster Victor Vallejo, E. Valencia, Beatrice Burnham, Mrs. H. Davenport, Mrs. Gordon, J. Wesley Warner, Chief Standing Bear, Inez Gomez, Mrs. Rosa Dray, James Needham, J. L. Frank, Joe de la Cruz, W. Plamett, Mrs. Helen Hayward, Glenn Marhoefer, Charles G. Fuller, Thomas Cassidy and Mr. Learned.

"THE ETERNAL GRIND"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

HEART interest is paramount in this "drama of humanity," as the Famous Players' press department rightly calls it, and the heart interest centers about Mary Pickford.

Miss Pickford has changed the boy's garb of "Peppina" for the garments of East Side poverty. She is seen here as one of three sisters, all employed in a sweatshop. Mary is a girl of ideals who wars against the lure of ease through wrong living; who fights the vicious and brutal methods of the owner of the factory in which she is employed; and who struggles to bring back to health one of her sisters, a chronic invalid.

When her other sister goes wrong, and is victimized by one of the factory owner's sons, Mary is undismayed, and keeps up the battle. Eventually she defeats the brutal employer, forces his son to make restitution to the weak sister by marrying her, and herself marries the younger son of her employer.

WHEN A FLOOR COLLAPSED IN THE FACTORY

It is one of Miss Pickford's typically appealing roles, and she makes it thoroughly convincing, as usual. Because of her sympathetic work, and also because of the careful way in which the theme has been handled, the picture becomes one of distinct wholesomeness, with a real moral lesson.

Loretta Blake gives a conventional, but satisfactory impersonation of the invalid; Dorothy West does well as the weakling, while John Bowers, as the good son, Robert Cain, as the idler, and J. Albert Hall, as the factory owner, are entirely capable.

The story, written by William H. Clifford, unfolds logically, moves with a fair degree of rapidity, and is without doubt excellent as a vehicle for Miss Pickford's abilities. The direction was in the hands of John B. O'Brien, and except for a rather unconvincing factory accident and two or three very minor flaws, is superior throughout.

The staging is up to the best Famous Players standard.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, THE TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS STAR, TEACHING THE BUMS "THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS," AND GETTING THE LAUGH FROM THE COWBOYS IN "THE GOOD BAD MAN." (Center) FAIRBANKS DOES A LITTLE LAUGHING HIMSELF

"THE GOOD BAD-MAN"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS is another Douglas Fairbanks subject, widely different in theme from those that have gone before, but no less sure-fire. It combines heart interest and thrills in just about the right proportion, and is one of those pictures which the reviewer feels absolutely justified in commending highly to the exhibitor.

"The Good Bad-Man" belongs to the new order of Westerns. It has all the dash, vigor, and picturesqueness of the old school, but it also has what many of the old Westerns did not have—a plot with an idea. This plot is built around Fairbanks, who, as "Passin' Through," an eccentric outlaw, commits crimes that he may give the proceeds to help unfortunate children—children "who never had a father." He believes he himself belongs to that group of unfortunates, and when he discovers that he does not his reason for being an outlaw vanishes, and he joins the posse which finally breaks up "The Wolf's" pack.

Heart interest is supplied not only by the love between "Passin' Through" and Amy, but also by "Passin' Through's" search for his own identity. He is arrested by a United States marshal, who, it develops, knows all about the facts of his life. The marshal tells the boy that his father was killed by Bud Frazer, who also hounded the mother until she died. Then the younger man goes to "get" Frazer, who turns out to be "The Wolf."

The scenes between the marshal (Doc Cannon) and "Passin' Through"; those between Amy (Bessie Love) and the curious outlaw are of emotional strength, and provide splendid contrast to the gun-play and mob scenes.

Allan Dwan's direction is first rate, and is nowhere more successful than in his capturing of wide sweeps of Western mountain and plain scenery as backgrounds for fights, furious riding, and other thrills. The sets and locations are thoroughly in keeping with the atmosphere of the piece. In all other externals the picture is practically beyond criticism.

Of course Fairbanks is the magnetic central figure throughout. But special mention should be made also of the work of Bessie Love, who continues to give every indication that she is on the road to stardom. The other players, all carefully picked as to type, are Sam De Grasse, Joseph Singleton, Mary Alden, George Beranger and Fred Burns. They are uniformly good.

"MR. JACK TRIFLES"

(Vitagraph-V-L-S-E—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

LIKE the previous Frank Daniels comedies, which are released under the general title of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," this number is built around a single incident, the humorous possibilities of which are especially adapted to Mr. Daniels' funmaking abilities.

Mr. Jack is here engaged in extricating himself from a perilous domestic situation brought about by his purchase of a pair of gloves for his wife's pretty French maid. He finally persuades his wife that the gloves were in reality bought as a birthday present for her, and incidentally gives her a lecture on the dangers of suspicion.

Mr. Daniels continues to register his whimsical humor in a thoroughly effective way, and, aided by clever subtitles, puts the picture over in fine style. The humor throughout is refined.

"THE WAYFARERS"

(American—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

A RECIPE that results pretty generally in a successful picture was used in the concocting of this one. The principals look well and act well, there are some thrills, a mystery element, a good romance, suspense, a hard final punch, and a happy ending. While in no sense pretentious or remarkable, it is the kind of film that people are not loath to see.

The author had the right ingredients, but now and then slipped up in their mixing. The motivation would have been more logical if a fuller explanation of certain actions had been given, and some of the coincidences might have appeared more reasonable if they had been introduced with less pother.

Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich are especially good in the lighter moments of the play, and when called upon for emotional work are not found wanting. George Periolat does not have a large part, but what he has he puts over with the usual smoothness. The demands of the scenario occasionally make it necessary for George Webb, the heavy, to appear unnatural, but his acting is usually adequate.

RENFREW IS FOUND DEAD

George Renfrew, a crooked promoter, steals the savings of Frank Andrews. Andrews threatens Renfrew, and so when the shark is later found murdered, Martin his henchman, sends the police to arrest the defrauded man. Through the help of Grace, a girl rooming in the same lodging-house, Andrews escapes, and the two are married. Some time later, Martin is taking his vacation, and passing through a Southern town, meets Grace. He then meets Andrews, and threatens to expose him if Grace does not run away with him. It then develops that Grace was Renfrew's murderer. She committed the crime because he ruined her sister. Martin rides off on his motorcycle to inform the police, but is thrown from the machine and killed.

"SLANDER"

(William Fox—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

BERTHA KALICH, whose fame as an emotional actress is securely established, appears here in a modern society drama built along characteristic Fox lines and destined, we believe, to appeal strongly to the great majority of picturegoers. It is replete with punches, deals with facts of life in which men and women are interested, and is staged in thoroughly effective fashion.

It leaves no doubt as to the ability of Madame Kalich in screen pantomime, for she is called upon to run the gamut of the emotions, and she succeeds without difficulty. Her acting holds the spectator throughout the picture, and more than once flashes with great power.

As to the theme, it is made of material which commands the close attention, very often the distinct sympathy, of the great mass of theatre patrons. Briefly, it is this: Richard Tremaine, by forging a letter, compromises Helene Blair (Madame Kalich), brings about her divorce from her husband and her separation from her children, and then secures her consent to marry him. She discovers, then, that he already has a wife; that he it was who destroyed her home life by his slanderous lies; she starts out deliberately to revenge herself on him. This she does by inducing his son to fall in love with her. The father is then brought face to face with the dilemma of seeing his son marry a woman with whom he had been intimate, or having his own disgrace brought out into the light.

BLAIR IS STRICKEN WITH REMORSE

The three finally meet in Helene's apartments, and the son is accidentally shot and killed by a revolver with which the father was attempting to end his own life. The father is charged with the murder of his son, and Helene is the chief witness against him. John Blair, Tremaine's counsel, learns from his wife's testimony of the perfidy of Tremaine. After the latter is sentenced to death, Helene, in a fit of remorse, tells Blair, with whom she is now reunited, that the killing was accidental. Tremaine is freed, and Helene goes back to her rightful place as Blair's wife.

In its essential points this story is well told. It is also filled with numerous touches, centering about the Blair children, which add greatly to its appeal. The cast is entirely competent and includes Eugene Ormonde, Mayme Kelso, Edward Van Sloan, Robert Rendell, Warren Cook, C. Peyton, T. Jerome Lawler, Caroline Harris, Walter Ferguson and Jacqueline Morgan.

Will S. Davis, also the author of the story, deserves credit for his careful direction, which is nearly always skillful. Some of the transitions from scene to scene, however, are a little abrupt, and calculated to confuse some spectators. This is not a serious flaw, and doubtless will be smoothed out before the subject is finally released.

Because of the great pathos thrown about the character of Helene, as interpreted by Madame Kalich, "Slander" will appeal particularly to women, but there is also no question about its ability to interest most men.

"WIVES OF THE RICH"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE difficulties experienced by a woman who, against her husband's wishes, plays bridge for high stakes, are interesting to the majority of theatre-goers—to judge from the number of times these complications have been employed by the noisy and the noiseless kind of drama. This film presents several of the better known evils resulting from injudicious gambling in elite circles, together with enough new ones to command the interest.

In some ways this production might be classed as an educational, because wives who lack imagination will be shown how to mulct their husbands painlessly—by charging $300 for a hundred-dollar wrap, by pawning jewelry sent on approval, by robbing the family safe, and by borrowing money from wealthy admirers.

Harry Mestayer is easily the best player in the cast. He is always convincing, and is especially effective in the strong climax of the play. Grace Darmond plays the weak, extravagant wife with considerable skill, while Lafayette McKee, Lillian Hayward, and Emma Glenwood are well cast in minor parts.

John Grant, a capitalist, disapproves of his wife's card playing, and declines to pay any further debts contracted by her at the gaming table. In her efforts to win back the fortune she has squandered, Mrs. Grant resorts to several unscrupulous schemes to obtain money. In order to meet an I. O. U. she borrows a large sum from Baker, her ardent admirer. One night she goes to Baker's apartment to ask an extension of the loan, but her husband hears of the errand and follows her. Baker tries to embrace her, and in the ensuing struggle he is killed. Grant ingeniously makes it appear that Baker committed suicide, and with his repentant wife flees from the gruesome scene.

"HUMAN DRIFTWOOD"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE greater part of this subject is given over to showing the efforts of a bad woman and a brutal man to ruin a young girl fresh from the convent. Their plans are defeated in a climax wherein there is an unusual amount of shooting. One shot from the bad man lodges in the heart of a priest, another mortally wounds the notorious woman and she makes a confession that the young girl is not the daughter of the hero and this leaves the way clear for a marriage between the two.

This story is told in a most melodramatic style and while it contains material for quite a strong release, the pictured results are not more than ordinary. There are points in the story that are not made clear; some of them are important and others will attract no more than passing notice, but the ultimate impression conveyed by the picture is that it has been handled with too little care.

The character of the story will likely excite some persons to comment unfavorably upon it. The wanton shooting in the climax, the suggestive character of the dance hall scenes and the subtitles belonging to this part of the picture will no doubt offend some of the spectators.

The direction, which was in charge of Emile Chautard, is average. The character of the story has prevented any brilliant work from Mr. Chautard, but he has done what was tendered him well. The settings are realistic and well carried out. Mr. Chautard's cameraman has not surpassed himself, but the blame might be laid on the quality of film used for the print.

MYRA ARRIVES FROM THE CONVENT

Robert Warwick is seen as Hendricks, the hero. His is a natural and pleasing performance, but he is not ideally cast. Frances Nelson is Velma, the innocent convent girl, and innocence is her main expression throughout the last three reels.

Mr. Warwick and Miss Nelson are featured and in their support are Leonore Harris as the bad woman, Albert S. Hart as the bad man and Alec B. Francis as the priest. The locale shifts from New York in the first two reels to Alaska in the last three.

"CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S BURLESQUE ON 'CARMEN'"

(Essanay-V-L-S-E—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THE Chaplin of the funny walk, eccentric bearing, and inevitable moustache is not lost in the uniform of a Spanish dragoon, and the same mirth-provoking antics which have made him famous are present in his work here. In his hands, Don Jose, or Lieutenant Darn Hosiery as he is known in this burlesque of the opera, is, of course, a "low brow" character whose affair with Carmen is as ridiculous as it is funny.

If Chaplin is late in taking full possession of the screen—near the end of the first reel—he is all the more welcome when he does, especially as the action then gains both animation and direction.

From this time on the laughs begin, and they continue at intervals until the end of the film, that is to say, whenever Charlie himself holds sway on the celluloid. An exception to this general observation is found, however, in the length of a fight between Charlie and a fellow officer, which consumes an amount of footage out of keeping with its ability to hold one's closest attention.

It would be a mistake to say that the picture is all slap-stick, though it is largely so. The famous death scene at the end is carried out in detail, and looks very much like real tragedy for a few moments until Darn Hosiery comes to life and turns tragedy into comedy by displaying a stage knife with which he has "killed" Carmen and himself.

Edna Purviance, as a burlesque Carmen, easily takes second honors; John Rand appears as the toreador, Leo White as the second officer, Jack Henderson as the uncle, Ben Turpin as a smuggler, May White as Chiquita, and Wesley Ruggles as a tramp.

The staging is adequate to the story, and comprehends a number of exteriors and interiors. The exteriors include sea and coast scenes of beauty, which serve as backgrounds for the long continued performances of the smugglers in the first reel. There are few subtitles, and they fail to add anything important to the action.

In utilizing two-reel material for a four-reeler, the makers of the picture evidently thought they could afford to present a number of scenes in which Chaplin does not appear, and to lengthen many of those in which he is present. But of the effectiveness of Chaplin's work there is not the slightest doubt, and he is, as always, the picture.

"HIS WIFE'S MISTAKE"

(Triangle-Keystone—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE cuts a lot of amusing capers in this, subjecting his physique to various kinds of damage, and not forgetting to inflict damage on others as well. The latter activity takes the form of hurling pies, throwing an effeminate nuisance into a pool of water, and the like. For himself Arbuckle reserves the right to chase a cake of soap around on the floor, slipping and falling at intervals.

And, of course, the usual revolver chase makes up the climax, when an angry husband learns that his wife, mistaking Janitor Arbuckle for a rich client from Missouri, has taken the corpulent janitor to lunch at the Oriental café.

Al St. John, as an office boy; William Jefferson, as the husband; Minta Durfee, as the wife; Betty Gray, as a telephone girl, and Arthur Earl, as the gentleman from Missouri, help along the fun-making in good style.

Some of the situations might be considered a trifle coarse, if they were not so ludicrous, but in general the piece is just roaring, good-natured slapstick. Arbuckle directed.

ILLUSTRATING "THE INVISIBLE ENEMY," AN E-K-O FILM COMPANY OFFERING

"THE INVISIBLE ENEMY"

(E-K-O—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

THE E-K-O Film Company has seized upon the psychological moment in launching "The Invisible Enemy."

The present crusade against the great white plague, instituted some twelve years ago in this country, has grown into a nation-wide movement. There are today 3,500 local agencies scattered throughout the country working in conjunction with the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, and this release of the E-K-O should be of incalculable assistance to them.

It is a rarity in this stage of the film industry to find a so-called educational film embodying an interesting story or plot in conjunction with its instructive capabilities. "The Invisible Enemy" outside of its educational value has a good plot, is well acted, has perfect photography and is ably directed.

The plot of the photoplay shows how the use of patent medicines and bad living conditions affect the health, and lucidly illustrates the supreme fight of knowledge against ignorance and greed.

Governor Webster (Frederick Vroom) a business associate of James Haggerty (William Parsons), a tenement house owner, is anxious to marry his daughter Muriel (Emma K. Oswald) to the latter.

Through political influence Haggerty is able to keep his tenements in an unsanitary and neglected state, and only a chance visit of Webster's son Jack (Jack Cummings) to one of the tenements brings out the true conditions.

Faith (Lucille Young), a young laundry girl, is overcome on the street from sheer exhaustion and is taken to her home by young Webster in his machine. The use of patent medicines has been the death of Faith's mother and unsanitary conditions of their living rooms in one of Haggerty's tenements has lost her the young sister. This meeting with Faith and pity for her condition affects Jack so that he marries her against his father's wishes.

Dr. De La Roche (Leon Kent), an authority on tuberculosis, befriends them, and sees that they get work on a ranch where he is about to go on a vacation.

Webster disowns his son and a reporter for a newspaper gets the facts and prints them in the morning paper. The tenement row of Haggerty's is exposed and he goes to the editor for redress only to be refused.

Webster is forced to support the society that insists on making the improvements necessary to make the tenements come up to requirements.

Muriel falls in love with the doctor, finally marries him, and supports him in his work to fight the great white plague.

The educational value of the photoplay is enhanced by the various technical exhibits adroitly interwoven, which have been carefully supervised by the National Society. This release should prove valuable both for theatre and community projection.

"I WILL REPAY"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THE temptation to subordinate realism to the potent "punch" has here proved too strong. Coincidence is forced to perform several strenuous feats of gymnastics, but situations of considerable tenseness are thus made possible.

No one will criticise an author or director for causing justice to triumph and villainy to bite its nails in final downfall, for the people must have Sunday-school-novel retribution. While some may find fault with the modus operandi, no one can say that the good and bad characters of this play are not given their just deserts in a dramatic manner.

Insanity furnishes much of the script's material, and while an alienist might be at a loss to understand the exact species of mental disorder depicted, the general public will not be so captious.

Marguerite Clayton, Edward Arnold, and John Junior handle the leads in agreeable fashion.

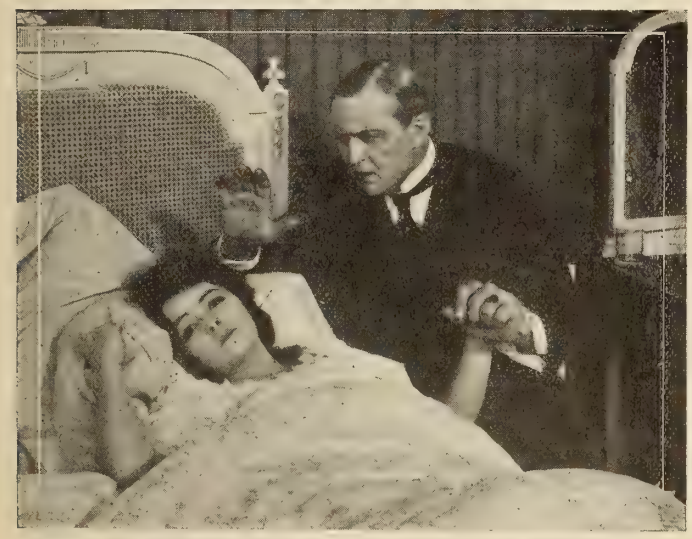
Louisville, Ky., April 8.

MRS. ALICE HEGAN RICE, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and other popular stories, has written a scenario of a motion picture play which is being produced by the Aladdin Film Corporation of Louisville. The story, which is educational in character, calls attention to the dangers of public dumps and shows the garbage situation in Louisville. The film will be produced under the auspices of the Louisville Civic League and will be shown at a local theatre.



"DOCTOR NEIGHBOR"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture puts forth a plea that it is not right to prolong a human life if that life is so distorted and mangled as to prevent its normal restoration. It might be taken as an attack on the time-honored law of the medical profession—to sustain life whenever there is the slightest chance, no matter what the consequences will be. Be that as it may, anything that attacks anything else with any degree of purpose is bound to be strong and "Doctor Neighbor" is very strong indeed.

To drive home her point, Author Agnes Hay has seen occasion to call for the picturization of a number of scenes taken around the bed of one Hazel Rogers, who with her spine twisted and fractured by an automobile accident, lies praying her attendants to deprive her of her life. There are long scenes and they are pathetic to the extreme, and after the nurse, her dearest friend, has granted her request, there is considerable mourning and weeping. It is not a cheerful picture and there is no happy conclusion.

THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN LOVE AND DUTY

Universal may have been troubled with thoughts of a wrathy censor board when "Doctor Neighbor" was produced, or perhaps the medical profession was to be reckoned with, for without the shadow of a doubt the picture would have run a more natural course if the doctor himself had been the one to deprive Hazel of her slight chance to recover. But this would have undoubtedly created an uproar among the aforementioned parties.

The picture concludes by showing the doctor, who had favored taking, but feared to take, the girl's life, giving his blood to save her relentless husband. The nurse, freed from her term in prison, goes to the doctor's house to find him dead from exhaustion. She realizes that it is useless to contradict any set law and there the story ends.

Hobart Bosworth makes a very strong figure of the doctor and Dorothy Davenport is the center of great sympathy as the ruined girl. Gretchen Lederer is the nurse, Emory Johnson the husband, while Adele Farrington and Margaret Whistler have other prominent parts which they handled exceedingly well.

Lloyd B. Carleton directed. His work is praiseworthy, for he has handled an extremely delicate subject in the least offensive manner possible.

"THE GAY LORD WARING"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WITH J. Warren Kerrigan as the romatic hero, whose ultimate fate is undecided until the last scene, "The Gay Lord Waring" makes a most promising bid for popularity. Houghton Townley's novel upon which the scenario by F. McGrew Willis was based smacks strongly of originality, and Mr. Kerrigan and originality present a formidable front.

However, even with a popular star and an original story, it is Director Otis Turner upon whose shoulders rested the greater work, and he should receive just and full due. Of late we have seen so many promising pictures spoiled by neglect of detail, that "The Gay Lord Waring" seems notable for its completeness in this respect. Its detail is practically perfect as to atmosphere and the matter of correct settings and natural action.

While Lord Arthur Waring is enjoying a little race with his footman, his horse collides with that of Helene Von Gerold. The girl is seriously wounded, but her father, a miser, will not advance the funds sufficient for her complete recovery. Lord Arthur is penniless, so he makes an agreement with his conniving half-brother, Mark, to forfeit his title by suicide within six months unless he returns a borrowed one hundred thousand pounds. Part of this sum he intends to spend on Helene's cure, but Mark, who is desirous of marrying Helene to gain her father's wealth, has gotten ahead of his brother and furnished the required sum.

Lord Waring then returns to the city and indulges in a very gay life. His time almost up, he returns to the country estate and settles his affairs. Countess Olga, an adventuress, in love with Waring, learns of his plight and goes so far as to marry a money lender that she may procure the sum necessary for Waring's release from his bond. But the unexpected occurs. Von Gerold's home burns. He is killed. Lord Waring rescues Helene. Mark in hurrying to the fire is thrown from his cart and killed. The reunion between Helene and Waring, though obvious, is not actually realized.

Lois Wilson is a good Helene Bertram Grassby a convincing villain, Maude George a most appealing Countess, while Harold Holland and Duke Worne handle other important parts.

The settings are pleasingly adequate throughout, while the photography meets all requirements.

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Celeste." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., April 25.)—An interesting story based on an old plot is here presented by Biograph with Vola Smith, Jack Mulhall and Charles Perley in the leading parts. The wife and baby of an artist are shipwrecked. Years later the girl is loved by a fisherman and a tourist. The two fight for her and fall over a cliff. The fisherman is killed. Celeste disappears and later is found as an artist's model. She is reunited with both her father and lover.

"The Spring Chicken." (Biograph. Three reels. Reissue.)—This comedy was made by Del Henderson and has in its cast Dave Morris, Reggie Morris, Gertrude Bambrick, Bud Ross, Louise Owen and Clarence Barr. Its main character impersonated by Dave Morris, was raised in a chicken incubator and therefore has chicken habits. He gets into a rumpus at a seaside hotel where an entire burlesque show and a runaway husband are encamping.

Of plot the picture has practically none and the business done by the various players is rather amateurish in execution. In fact the entire picture is interesting only because it shows a collection of comedy players, now in their prime, but who at the time of the production of this picture were just learning the tricks of the art. The same may be said of the director.

"I Will Repay." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., March 25.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Last Adventure." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., April 15.)—The story of this film and its method of development are sufficiently novel to counterbalance the frequent improbabilities. The public seems to be perennially interested in society crooks, and so should enjoy seeing the shrewd, though seemingly impossible, exploits of the tricksters depicted in this release.

The principals, Lillian Drew, John Lorenz, and Edward Arnold, are all good.

Timothy Hayden has a strong influence over Beatrice Clemmons. He forces her to become a Salamander—accepting gifts from rich suitors and selling them. Arnold Burton, a millionaire, comes under Beatrice's spell, and she falls in love with him. When she marries, Burton Hayden threatens to reveal her past unless she secures a divorce and alimony. Beatrice herself tells her husband of her former life, and is forgiven. Hayden is about to shoot Beatrice, when he is killed by the butler.

"The Elder Brother." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., April 18.)—This re-issue not shown for review; the story follows. Phillip and Irving, two brothers, lead different lives. Irving is an epicure of wine and women, while Phillip is a hard-working doctor. Irving falls in love with a cabaret girl, and one of his jealous friends causes him to become a wreck through smoking cocaine-doped cigarettes. When Phillip discovers his brother's condition, he goes to the girl to denounce her. But she proves her innocence, and the doctor falls in love with her.

In the cast are Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, Gerda Holmes, and John H. Cossar.

"Canimated Nooz Pictorial," No. 9. (Essanay. Split reel. Wed., April 19.)—Animated cartoon burlesque of current happenings, together with five hundred feet of Western scenic.

"Her Naked Soul." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., April 22.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Shirley Davis, a woman of the half world, reforms and becomes a stenographer. Her employer marries her, and they are happy for some years, until Chadwick, an old chum of the husband, threatens to expose Shirley's past life, unless she gives herself to him.

She tells her husband, and he goes off to shoot Chadwick. Shirley runs to warn Chadwick, so that her husband may not commit murder. She finds him dead, and when she is accused of the murder, her husband confesses that he was the slayer. It later develops that Chadwick's son did the killing so Shirley and her husband are happy once more.

The cast is composed of Darwin Karr, Nell Craig, Hugh Thompson, and Edmund F. Cobb.

"Ham and Preparedness." (Kalem. Tues., April 18.)—Ham masques as an army hero and is sheltered by an officer until Bud comes along and proclaims his real identity. This theme elaborated makes "Ham and Preparedness" one of the best of the Ham and Bud comedies. It has a quantity of original business, while Lloyd Hamilton has seldom appeared to better advantage.

"Their Taking Ways." (Kalem. Wed., April 19.)—Ethel Teare has again been awarded a story which gives her and the support plenty of opportunity for comedy work, besides possessing a strong vein of humor of its own. Ethel is of the light-fingered order and so is the gentleman across the way. They meet and try to ply their trade on one another, but discovered, they decide that in union there is strength.

"The Governor's Special." (Kalem. Sat., April 22.)—From the title one is led to believe that this picture belongs to the old school wherein presidents' and governors' specials were continually being jeopardized. The situations are a little hackneyed perhaps, but on the whole this reel measures well up to the high standard of the "Hazards of Helen" series. There is the thrill and a credible story which creates no little suspense.

"A War of Wits." (Kalem. Two reels. Week of April 17.)—This is an episode of "The Social Pirates" series and continues in the same entertaining path marked by its predecessors. The two young ladies succeed in duping a quack doctor by using the very same methods on him, which he employed against his victims. Original to the extreme, "A War of Wits" is evolved in the same realistic manner as the other numbers of the serial. It is a good picture and good pictures are scarce.

"Romance and Riot." (Kalem. Fri., April 14. The police chief and one of his hirelings are both in love with Sis, the slavey, and the rivalry is great. When a burglar happens along, the whole household is thrown into a riot and great is the confusion until he is finally captured Rose Melville and Henry Murdock continue to give good performances, but their vehicle is not quite as good this time.

"A Wise Waiter." (Lubin. Sat., April 8.)—This Billie Reeves subject misses fire at almost every point, and can only be considered mildly amusing. It is chiefly slapstick, but it offers no new situations, and very little that can be called comedy. The cast, Reeves, John Shermer, Francis Joyner, Eleanor Blanchard, and Margaret Moore, who were directed by Earl Metcalfe, deserve better material.

"Otto the Bell Boy." (Lubin. Mon., April 10.)—Davy Don is seen as an eccentric bell boy in this. Despite the absence of anything roaringly funny, some of his typical character comedy is interesting. Patsy De Forest is his chief assistant, and appears to good advantage. Edwin McKim directed.

"Mr. Housekeeper." (Lubin. Sat., April 15.)—Again Billie Reeves, this time as a would-be boarding house proprietor, whose affair with a female star boarder is rudely interrupted by the reappearance of his wife after a short absence. The ludicrous quality of some of the situations may put them over. Eleanor Blanchard and Francis Joyner are also in the cast, which worked under the direction of Earl Metcalfe.

"The Three Wise Men." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., April 17.)—Will be Reviewed at length in next week's issue.

"Too Many Chefs." (Selig. Sat., April 22.)—This Western comedy is along familiar lines but has enough original business to get some laughs. While the humor is the reverse of subtle, it must be remembered that cowboys do not get their fun out of after-dinner quips and double-entendre. Tom Mix, Victoria Forde, and Joe Ryan handle the leads acceptably.

Ruth returns to the ranch after acquiring Eastern polish and chides the boys for chewing tobacco, swearing, and other breaches. The men start off for the round-up, but the cook gets drunk, puts his pipe in the coffee-pot, and in other ways annoys the cowboys. They send a hurry call to Ruth for a cook, and she decides to dress like a man and cook for them. When she prepares a plate of fudge for supper, the men kick her violently, and her identity is made known. Tom, the foreman, proposes on the spot, and is accepted.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Wayfarers." (American. Three reels. Sat., April 15.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"His Masterpiece." (American. Two reels. Mon., April 17.)—An unusually pleasing program contribution has here been made out of mediocre material. A few minor alterations do not cover up the thread-bareness of the story, but the director introduces so many delicate touches of heart appeal that the conventionality of the theme is forgiven. The director was particularly happy in his choice of locations—and the cameraman did full justice to them. Edward Coxen tackles the hero's part in the way that has made him popular. Marguerite Nicholls, his new leading woman, is a pleasing ingenue with some dramatic ability. Charles Newton and Lizette Thorne are excellent in lesser roles.

A painting by Eric DeVoe creates a furore at the Annual Exhibition, and people are curious to know how he was inspired to paint its weird beauty. The story of its conception is then shown. DeVoe is about to be divorced from his wife, and goes to the country to escape gossip. There he meets Doris, a country girl, and falls in love with her. But his wife learns of his new love and refuses to divorce him.

He stays in the city, hoping that she will relent, while Doris is about to bear him a child. When he does not return, she writes him a letter telling that she is going to commit suicide. In a frenzy of remorse he paints a picture of her drowning in a brook. Later he finds that she was prevented from killing herself, and their happiness is assured.

"Counterfeit Love." (Vogue. Tues., April 18.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Madge, a girl detective, is sent to capture a gang of counterfeiters, but falls in love with one of them. She is at a loss to know what to do until it comes out that the man she loves is also a detective.

Some of the players are Rube Miller, Arthur Tavares, Alice Neice, and Madge Kirby.

"Number, Please?" (Beauty. Wed., April 19.)—This comedy has considerable originality, and, strangely enough, a real plot. The "business" is often strenuous enough to be termed slapstick, but it is ingenious and clean. Carol Halloway and John Sheehan give their usual good performances, and in the support John Steppling is particularly effective. Others that appear are Mary Talbot and Dick Rosson.

Joe, a lineman, loves Lizzie, a telephone operator. Lizzie makes a lot of trouble by flirting over the phone with subscribers, finally getting one man into divorce proceedings with his wife. But she smoothes over this mix-up, and is finally persuaded by the lineman's cave-man tactics to marry him.

"The Return." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., April 21.)—A rather unusual plot and an unexpected ending make this a good picture. Nothing extraordinary was attempted in its production, but the acting is good and the photography clear. Art Acord, hero of the Buck Parvin series, makes a good principal, and Mollie Shafer, Clarence Burton, Nita Davis, and Lawrence Peyton furnish excellent support.

Melville, the express agent in a small Western town, misses some money from the till, and his son Frank believes that his father stole it. Frank leaves a note, saying that he took the money, and goes off to make the loss good. Before he returns it develops that the money was carried off and buried by a dog. Frank comes back with the money, and when he finds out how the loss occurred, he goes to find Mary, his sweetheart. Mary is in her cabin and the door is besieged by a rejected suitor. When Frank knocks on the door, Mary thinks it is the attacker, and kills him with a revolver.

"Realization." (American. Three reels. Sat., April 22.)—Frank Borzage, the director, was certainly handed a hard one when asked to make a picture out of the scenario of this film. The story of it has been the theme of scores of photoplays, and most of them have been treated in substantially the same way as is this one. The wonder of it is that this version is really interesting and entertaining. A lot of the credit goes to Alfred Vosburgh and Vivian Rich. Others in the cast are George Periolat, Louise Lester, Edna Frawley, and Joseph Beaudry.

Carl, first violin of a theatre orchestra, falls in love with Elsa, a minor actress of the company. She is also admired by Brown, a rich rounder. Carl's sister comes to visit him, and he leaves a note on Elsa's dressing table, asking her to have lunch with them. Brown sees this note, and tearing it up, tells Elsa that her lover is entertaining another.

The girl verifies this, and in her despair, decides to accept Brown's immoral offer. That night there is a fire in the theatre, and Carl rescues Elsa. She thinks it is Brown who is the hero, until Carl's sister explains who she is and asks Elsa to go to the hospital with her, where her brother is severely burned. Elsa realizes Carl's devotion and accepts his proposal.

"The Bookworm's Blessed Blunders." (Beauty. Sun., April 23.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Ignatius, proprietor of a book store, wants money to marry an elderly spinster. He absent-mindedly puts a dollar bill in every book he sells one morning, and the store is besieged with customers. His entire stock is sold out before the purchasers realize that there are no more bills in the volumes. He forgets that he is to be married until he reads in a book "—and so they were married." Orral Humphrey and Lucille Ward play the leads.

"Slipping It Over on Father." (Vogue. Sun., April 23.)—If the energy displayed by the actors were translated into laughs, this slapstick would be a winner, but the plot and business are so musty that the comedians are greatly hampered. This type of athletic humor always seems sure-fire, however, and no doubt many audiences will enjoy the strenuous capers cut. Two or three vulgar incidents might be safely eliminated. In the cast are Paddy McQuire, Louise Owen, Jack Connelly, Jack Gaines, and Mert Sterling.

Old Man Blank doesn't want Jack to marry Louise, so he sends her to boarding school. But Jack dresses as a girl, enters the same school, and has a fine time until his sex is discovered. Furious slapstick fights and chases ensue, and the hubbub is increased when a burglar enters the foray. Jack and Louise finally escape and get married. Louise wins her father's blessing by the tried-and-true method of chucking him under the chin.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"The Iron Claw," No. 5. (Pathé. Two reels.)—Several unique features are introduced to help along the excitement of this chapter. Margery, accompanied by Manly, her father's secretary, on a shopping tour, sees a parrot which once belonged to her enemy, Legar, and buys it. The parrot escapes and returns to Legar.

Later Margery is recaptured by the criminals, who steal a valuable may, and then lock her in the vault. Rescuers arrive, and after the parrot has continually repeated the combination of the vault, she is released. The Laughing mask recovers the stolen map. Creighton Hale, Pearl White and Sheldon Lewis head the cast.

"Pathe News," No. 28. (Pathé.)—Supply wagon trains convoyed by U. S. Troops into interior Mexico; Harlem, N. Y., babies in annual carnival parade; Glenn Martin instructs militia in aviation, at Lost Angeles; new automobile boulevard dedicated with 50-mile race at San Diego; German freighter, raised after two years on the bottom, towed into San Francisco; new armored car tested at Eastchester, N. Y.; long-abandoned ship yards at Bath, Me., reopened by growing demand for tonnage; citizens of Ysleta, Texas, on the border, organize their own home guard; tank wagons unloaded at Columbus, N. M., for use of U. S. expedition; Pathé Paris fashions in color.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Graft." (Universal Special Feature. Two reels. Nineteenth Episode. Week of April 17.)—The grafters here attempt to implicate a certain senator who is opposing a munition bill which would benefit the trusts. Mayor Harding scents trouble and poses as the senator. He goes to visit parties concerned in the frameup and they manage to photograph him while in the arms of a young girl.

In the meantime the real senator, mistaken for the mayor by hirelings of the grafters, and Dorothy, have been imprisoned in an old shack which is set afire. Harding arrives in time to save both and the next day the mayor and his associates have the laugh on the grafters when they come to collect hush money.

"Her Bitter Cup." (Red Feather. Five reels. Mon., April 17.)—Reviewed at length in the issue of April 8.

"His Neighbor's Wife." (Nestor. Mon., April 17.)—Neal asks for a raise, giving marriage as the cause. His boss consents and asks himself to dinner. Neal has to borrow his friend's wife and when the friend comes in drunk things start to hum, ending by landing Neal in prison with not a friend in the world.

Neal Burns, Ray Gallagher, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry are the leads in this comedy which though old in situations manages to register quite effectively. Burns wrote the scenario while Horace Davey directed.

"The Best Man's Bride." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., April 18.)—A comedy-drama of genuinely fine type that has an original story and convinces despite improbability, which contains suspense and plenty of it. Herbert Rawlinson and Francelia Billington are well equipped to take the romantic leads and their acting adds much to the picture. The story was written by Alice McGowan and Malcom Strong, Ben Cohn prepared the scenario and William Worthington directed in his usual efficient style.

"Love Laughs At Dyspepsia." (Imp. Tues., April 18.)—An eccentric comedy romance indulged in between Victor Potel and Jean Bernoudy. Miss Bernoudy is one of the cleverest actresses that ever appeared in a slavey role. She puts over her business in an unaffected way that is simply uproarious. Naturally the picture is good. Little Zoe Beck appears as cupid.

"Royal Love." (Victor Three reels. Wed., April 19.)—An unconvincing picture produced by Percy Nash in England. There is good lighting but nothing else meritorious. The story, laid in an imaginary kingdom, is conventional in theme and is carelessly and impossibly treated. There is also much that is revolting in the subject, such as shooting a man at very close range and running a woman through the back with a sword. The photography is poor.

"A Meeting for a Cheating." (L-Ko. Wed., April 19.)—This comedy featuring Billy Ritchie was not shown for review.

"Oh! What a Whopper." (Big 4. Two reels. Thurs., April 20.)—Whatever comedy that this hackneyed plot contained at the outset was quite spoiled by the overacting of Harry Coleman, who essays to be a comedian. There are few laughs in the two reels, while Coleman's monotonous expressions soon become tiresome.

"The Gambler." (Laemmle. Thurs., April 20.)—The gambler disappears and his wife marries an old sweetheart. Returning, the gambler realizes his worthlessness and the good character of his rival, so he goes away for ever. Rather unique and pleasing. Myrtle Gonzalez, Fred Church and Val Paul are the leads.

"The Haunted Bell." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., April 21.)—A mystery picture adapted from a story by the late Jacques Futrelle, produced by Henry Otto with King Baggot and Edna Hunter in the principal parts. It concerns a bell, to which great importance is attached by the Hindus.

It is in the possession of a novelist and one morning it disappears and a curio dealer is found murdered on the floor. It develops that a Hindu committed the crime. The story is really in two distinct episodes and while a little obvious at all times, it stimulates the interest to an average degree. Frank Smith and Joe Granby are also in the cast.

"A Strange Confession." (Victor. Fri., April 21.)—Joe the ape of the Universal zoo plays a prominena part in this drama. He steals a wallet and the irate parent believes his gambling son to have committed the crime. However, the ape enters again and brings back the wallet, clearing up the mystery. Joe is very clever, but the story is rather unconvincingly done. Hunt directed Colin Chase, Golda Coldwell, Rex de Roselli and Mrs. Jay Hunt in the leading parts.

"Eddie's Night Out." (Nestor. Fri., April 21.)—Eddie and his wife are the slaves of the latter's mother but after a boisterous night Eddie takes the reins in his own hands and wins out. This is a fair comedy, that has several laughs of a stereotyped variety throughout it but which is not blessed with a story the like of which Al Christie can produce. Eddie Lyons, Stella Adams and Betty Compson are the principals.

"The Passing of Hell's Crown." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., April 22.)—Harry Carey is here cast as a bad man, undisputed ruler of Hell's Crown. In an encounter with the sheriff's daughter he is led to reform, principally because he sees a bible and remembers his childhood days. The realism of such a transformation is questionable and seems to us quite weak. The story on the whole is fair, Carey does average work and the supporting cast, headed by Olive Golden, is adequate. Jacques Jaccard directed from a scenario by W. B. Pearson.

"Just Yet But Not Quite." (Joker. Sat., April 22.)—This comedy resembles its title in that it means nothing, but notwithstanding, Ernie Shields and Marcia Moore manage to put the reel over in an averagely laughable style.

"His World of Darkness." (Rex. Three reels. Sun., April 23.)—There are some parts of this strong melodrama that are illogical but on the whole it fills the bill to a nicety. The climax is unusual and the whole thing is developed with an eye to suspense. The theme concerns the husband who regains his sight to discover that his wife is unfaithful. Ben Wilson, Clara Beyers, and Charles Ogle are the leads. Stuart Paton is the author.

"Little Billy's School Days." (L-Ko. Sun., April 23.)—A comedy with little Billy and Olive, that contains a welcome touch of drama here and there. It concerns itself largely with the capers cut by school children of which Billy and Fatty Voss are the leaders. The spectacle of Fatty and Billy side by side is one of the funniest sights in the reel.

First National Motion Picture Exposition

Madison Square Garden, May 6-14 inclusive

Binder hereby goes on record as staking his reputation on this show, if that means anything to you. Yes, and his expectations, too.

There won't be a "still" in the whole place. You will see the biggest "close-up" ever. Now register astonishment, for you are going to feel it! Action! That's me,

J. W. Binder

THOMAS H. INCE

announces

That his CINEMA-SPECTACLE by C. Gardner Sullivan will be presented for the first time anywhere at the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, Monday night, April 17.

CIVILIZATION

CIVILIZATION will be in ten reels.

It is the most astounding and daring production ever known since the beginning of Cinematography and the Theatre.

Thousands of actors were engaged in the making of CIVILIZATION.

One hundred and ninety thousand feet of film were taken to secure ten thousand feet for the final screen display.

Immediately after the Los Angeles production, CIVILIZATION will be presented in New York at an important Broadway Theatre to be announced later.

Mr. Ince desires to give credit to the following assistants for their aid in the production of CIVILIZATION:

RAYMOND B. WEST, Jay Hunt, Reginald Barker, Irving Willat, J. Parker Reed, Walter Edwards and David M. Hartford.

A special Orchestra of thirty-five will interpret the incidental music by Victor L. Schertzinger.

Motion Picture Projection Simplified

By J. H. Hallberg

81,—Can you offer for comparison something, which acts in a similar manner, to the magnetic iron core without an air-gap and with an air-gap?

Ans.—The magnetic iron core in a transformer, choke-coil or other electric machine has to provide a path for the magnetic lines of force generated by the electric current passing through the windings surrounding the core. If the core is continuous and made of high-grade iron or electrical steel and of large enough cross section, it will properly transmit or provide passage for practically all of the lines of force set up by the magnetizing coil.

There is a limit to the size of the core required and to make the core larger than necessary would only very slightly increase the lines of force and consequent power of the apparatus, and as the core becomes larger the windings also have to be larger and therefore the expense of the apparatus is greater and the losses due to resistance drop in the windings also become greater.

You know that in an electric system the wires which carry the current, have to be of a certain size in order to pass a given number of amperes with a given drop or resistance. If the wire is made very large for a given ampere flow, no particular advantage is gained and the cost of the wire is increased out of proportion to the reduction in voltage loss. Therefore, certain rules have been established by experiments and tests through the means of which we are able to determine the exact size wire required at normal efficiency to carry a given amount of amperes for different classes of work.

We have just discovered under the previous answer that to make the core very small or to cut it off altogether introduces magnetic resistance in the circuit. We also have learned and know that if we reduce the diameter of an electric conductor its resistance increases and we also know that if we make the conductor of certain materials it is possible to increase the voltage drop or resistance and it goes without saying that if we break the wire altogether and separate it so as to introduce an air-gap in the electric circuit the resistance is tremendously increased and it will take a very high voltage to jump over the space.

Considering the foregoing, it is evident that the magnetic core without an air-gap is in action similar to an electric conductor of uniform and proper size (and continuous) to carry the current from one terminal to the other, and also that the magnetic core with an air-gap is in action the same as an electric conductor which may have in series with it another conductor of higher resistance or a part of the conductor may have been reduced in diameter at some point, introducing resistance or the wire may be broken, thus introducing an air-gap.

It is well to remember this comparison because the student must make up his mind that in treating with magnetic cores he has to consider capacity of the core as to its cross section and the quality of the iron as well as the shape of the core and its construction for any given piece of apparatus. In about the same manner he would have to consider the size of a wire, the material from which the wire is made and the form in which it is wound when producing a circuit or magnetizing coil for certain work.

82,—Knowing that an adjustment of the air-gap in the core of a choke-coil alters the current flow, what other means can be used for altering the current flow without increasing or decreasing the length of the air-gap?

Ans.—The number of turns surrounding the iron core governs also the reactive or choke-effect of the coil. With many turns the reactance or choking effect is greater with a lesser number of turns, the reactance is proportionately reduced.

There are many choke-coils on the market used for moving picture arcs and for other purposes which have leads brought out from different portions of the windings of the coil and connected to a terminal board of contact buttons with a lever making contact in a similar manner as practiced with ordinary adjustable rheostats.

Rothapfel Is A Forty-two Centimetre Musical Gun

He Is the Explosive Charge and the Shell, All in One, When in Command of Orchestra, Is Conclusion of Observer Who Watched Two-Hour Rehearsal at Knickerbocker Theatre—His Methods Are Worth Study of Managers Who Realize Importance of Best Musical Accompaniment with Pictures

By James S. Judd

SOLDIERS from the European war say that the presence in the air of the shells from the big guns are felt long before one can locate them. This thought came to my mind last Sunday morning as I was watching the Knickerbocker orchestra rehearsing the next week's music.

My sixth sense told me that some new aggressive element was present. On turning I found that S. L. Rothapfel had projected himself into the semi-darkness. Nor is this entirely a figure of speech, for Rothapfel is the big gun, the explosive charge and the shell—all in one.

He radiates force, but alongside that is a bonhomie, which puts not only the visitor at his ease, but leads everyone working under him to try to earn an expression of approbation which is as spontaneously given as a criticism of poor work.

In one breath, almost, the orchestra was told that had Victor Herbert heard them play as they had just done, he would jump out of the window, and the violin soloist in the orchestra was patted on the back and told he was "splendid." The smile that accompanied the latter compliment was so genuine that it brought a little gasp from the man who received it.

The public generally, and this includes altogether too many motion picture theatre managers, thinks of a motion picture entertainment only as the showing of film on a screen—a purely mechanical proposition; if musical or vaudeville numbers are added, they are independent units, and the same idea practically applies to the music which accompanies the film showing.

Importance of Interpreting the Film Through Music

Few realize that the music contains possibilities of tremendous value in "interpreting" the film. The average man would perhaps notice if a tango was played while a funeral procession was on the screen, or the "Blue Danube" with a French cabaret scene. That same average man after attending a Knickerbocker show might not know what had made the pictures so interesting until possibly he had seen part or all of them elsewhere; he might then begin to wonder what was the difference. To him, let the secret be told—it's Rothapfel!

We have five senses—we see, hear, smell, touch and taste. All of these help to make a mental impression or image. The more of these senses that contribute, the more perfect and the stronger the image. That is the keynote of Rothapfel's success.

Of course, the pictures are subject to selection in the first place—one out of four is about Rothapfel's average—but after the selection comes the creation of an atmosphere which will supplement, interpret, the picture.

The setting for the pictures is, of course, important—the stage accessories, the lights of proper color and tone, the proper order of the numbers in the program with the interspersing of musical and other numbers so the mind will be kept at the highest point of receptive interest.

May I add, parenthetically, a word of praise for the selection and training of employees at the Knickerbocker, which brings a feeling of satisfaction to the patron whose every wish is so courteously ascertained and followed. Such details militate toward receptiveness.

To Rothapfel, however, next to the film itself (sight), is the great interpreter of the picture the music (hearing). Nor does he miss an opportunity to appeal to the other senses. The doors open for a moment with a winter scene on the screen, an appeal to the sense of touch—the right kind of "touch," too; a bit of incense with an oriental scene or a spray of extract with a rose garden intensifies the mental image (smell) while the film is on the screen, but is forgotten when the film theme is changed.

Works with Orchestra Large Enough for Comic Opera

I arrived at the Knickerbocker with the musical director. For an hour I heard him working with an orchestra large enough for a comic opera; believe some call it "reinforced," but there was no "concrete" in this orchestra.

It reminded me more of a class in calisthenics, just then, taking notes, for each man had a musical instrument and a lead pencil. During that first hour they used the pencil most; they knew most of the music and it was simply a matter of getting the proper order. I can still hear Hugo Riesenfield—"Omit numbers 1, 2, 3 and 4; play numbers 5 and 6; then go back to number 1. . . . First part we don't play; let me hear number 2. . . . Now we come to something we don't know—now, come boys!

"Man alive, please be gentile. [a laugh.] The picture is this . . . You see it should be played soft!"

The same kind of talk I suppose you would hear at any rehearsal, now praising, now pleading, now reviling—but different in that this was interpreting film.

After an hour of this I thought we must be about through, and that perhaps Rothapfel was not coming, but I was wrong. What I had listened to was only the score for the feature. That alone had forty-one different musical units, and these had been selected by Rothapfel the night before, or rather after Saturday night's performance and three o'clock Sunday morning. He did it himself because his musical director was ill.

When I have a few spare moments I am going gunning for the man who volunteered the information it was surprising how Rothapfel, with no knowledge of music, could do such wonders with a musical program.

I'm going to take that man to the Knickerbocker and have him watch, as I did, Rothapfel lead the orchestra and make them put technique and expression into a range of numbers from "The Bowery" to Chopin's "Funeral March."

Rothapfel's Entrance Electrifies the Orchestra

Then Rothapfel came and the sparks flew. Coat off, now in the orchestra, now on the stage where he could take the lead fore and back, he kept everyone on the jump. The orchestra turned over its books with a snap and promptly responded to his request to "put plenty of stuff" into the march; no detail seemed to escape him—the cymbal, the organ, the horn; in fact, every instrument was brought in turn to its proper strength to produce just the effect he wanted.

The music for a hunting scene on the screen was re-shaped to his liking and was made much more effective. Every second Rothapfel had every detail of the film program in mind and was anticipating each scene of the "Weekly" before it was shown. A voice normally of moderate tone in an instant became a torrent of snappy leadership and at times of sarcastic anathema.

Obviously Rothapfel sees no drawback in abruptly changing music adapted to one character of film to that of an entirely different character as the film changes. This was particularly noticeable when the "Weekly" was being shown.

"If the film abruptly changes, why shouldn't the music?" The trumpets, horn and reeds for the hunting scene quickly yield to the lightly singing "Yankee Girl."

Then comes a martial air for Secretary McAdoo and President Wilson and the cartoon. This latter brought out Rothapfel's quickness to take advantage of an opportunity.

The title was "I hear you calling me." Like a flash the orchestra was stopped and told to play three bars of the old song of that title as the presidential candidate's face appeared coming out of the cave. A sure laugh!

Mastery of Detail Shown in Music for Military Scenes

Mastery of detail was evidenced in the "call" given the film man for not having changed the order of two titles in a Mexican war film. In this a bugle was called for Funston and a tango for the Mexican troops, but after considerable consultation a galop was decided upon. See the infinite trouble

Directory of New Theatres

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

CALIFORNIA

THE Point theatre at Richmond is being improved, a number of changes being made in the operating equipment.

The firm of Horner and Dowler at Alpaugh has been dissolved and the business of conducting a theatre there has been taken over by R. W. Horner.

The Excelsior theatre in the Mission district, San Francisco, is to be reopened shortly, after having been closed for some time.

Martin Kertzig, who has conducted the Ocean View theatre at San Francisco for several months, has disposed of the house to Mrs. N. Cooper.

The Lorin theatre at Berkeley is closed, a portion of the house has been torn down and a large addition is being made by the owners, Messrs. Beach and Krahn.

The Republic theatre, one of the largest in the Fillmore district of San Francisco, and one erected shortly after the great fire of 1906, has been purchased by Sol Fisher, formerly of the Polk theatre, and W. Fest, formerly of the Valencia. The present policy of vaudeville and motion pictures will be continued.

CANADA

There are a number of theatres opening in Quebec, among them the new O'Connor Hall, in Huntingdon, operated by O'Connor Brothers. New machines are being installed and a first class service program will be used.

The New Imperial theatre, Quebec, will open on May 1. The capacity of this theatre is about 700 seats and two Power's machines will supply the projection. Mr. Knight is to be manager of the new house and states that a seven-piece orchestra will be a feature of the musical equipment.

The Rosedale theatre, Toronto, a very pretty North End house, has changed hands and Mr. Rappaport, formerly of the Crescent Palace theatre, Toronto Junction, has taken over the active management.

GEORGIA

The erection of a $40,000 motion picture house and the proposed construction of store buildings by Sol Loen, is reported from Columbus.

INDIANA

The American Motion Picture theatre at Terre Haute, has been sold by Maurice Less, to the Irving Theatre Company, of Chicago, for $42,000. The new owners took possession April 15.

A. S. Bower, manager of the Family theatre, at Covington, has leased the room next to the postoffice, formerly occupied by the Cogley store, and expects to start a motion picture theatre soon.

The room is being lengthened considerably, the seats will be raised and a new front put in. The interior will be redecorated. A new projection machine has been purchased, to provide better and clearer pictures. The change will improve the appearance of the north side of the square.

IOWA

Swift Brothers have sold the Lyric at Akron to A. E. Lipp.

KANSAS

Kincaid, a town of some four hundred and fifty people, decided that it needed a moving picture house, so the Commercial club drew up petitions which resulted in the voting of bonds for a new house, which will be erected soon.

George Beach, of Concordia, who now has charge of the Lyric theatre at that place will build a new theatre and have it ready for occupancy by June 1. The new house will cost about $25,000 and will have a seating capacity of 570 people.

KENTUCKY

Plans are being considered for the erection of a new theatre at Warsaw, to take the place of the old opera house which was destroyed by fire about four years ago. When completed, the house will probably be used for both motion pictures and road shows. The proposed theatre, which will be built by local capitalists, will be three stories in height. The ground floor will be given over to the theatre proper and the floor above will be rented as offices and lodge rooms. The estimated cost of the structure is $16,000.

LOUISIANA

Fire did damage approximating $30,000 to property of W. Tebault, Jr., exhibitor of New Orleans, on March 25. The United States Auditorium, 3311-3317 Magazine street, valued at $21,000, was totally destroyed. The United States theatre, at 3312-3314 Magazine street, also owned by Tebault, suffered a damage of $600. A cottage at 3319 Magazine street, occupied by Tebault, valued at $5,000, including the contents, was destroyed. The first swept an entire block of buildings and was a spectacular early morning affair in which all the fire apparatus of the city was called into play. Although the entire loss was but a little over $40,000, Mr. Tebault was the heaviest loser, $30,000 representing his share.

Miller Music Company, through L. N. Wooters, abandoned the project of reopening Dumaine theatre No. 2, 110 North Jefferson Davis parkway, New Orleans. Probability is that other parties, connected with the Salmen Brick & Lumber Company, Whitney-Central Bank building, New Orleans, will take over the theatre, to open about May 1.

J. Shepperd, 231 Telemachas street, New Orleans, announces his new theatre, corner Cortez and Cleveland streets, will open about May 10.

Eastern capitalists will build a 2,300 seating capacity theatre in New Orleans, it is reported. This rumor has been going the round of the exchanges for more than two weeks. The site apparently selected by the capitalists is in Canal street, six blocks from the river. This project, if confirmed, is a daring and brilliant one, inasmuch as the section of the city referred to is not a desirable location on account of being two blocks away from the crowded squares.

Herman Fichtenberg has begun work on his $100,000 Globe theatre, which is being built at 614 Canal street, New Orleans.

C. E. Coe, manager of the Louisiana theatre, one of the largest houses in Baton Rouge, has recovered from a lingering illness. He is recuperating in New Orleans and is making a round of the exchanges in search of live film for his theatre.

It is understood that a large airdome will be erected in the upper section of New Orleans; to be ready some time in June, and to embrace several new ideas in airdome construction.

The Triangle theatre, New Orleans, in order to help along a good cause, gave a benefit performance on April 5 for the New Orleans Women's Dispensary.

The Columbia Amusement Company, Baton Rouge, has purchased two Power's 6-B projection machines and a Minusa gold fibre screen from the Consolidated Film and Supply Company.

The Alamo theatre at Georgetown, has been closed. The opera chairs were purchased for a theatre at Aurora, Ind.

MASSACHUSETTS

The New Bedford Olympia opened on Monday, April 3. The house is one of the Gordon group and seats 2,600. It has booked the Fox feature service, and will also use some Triangle pictures. A special train left Boston at 5:10 Monday carrying the Boston moving picture men down for the opening. The policy of the house will be the same as the other Gordon houses.

Alfred Verrico, formerly manager of the Columbus theatre, Worcester, is now manager of the Star, at Milford.

It will be Manager Gammon at the Apollo theatre, Boston, from now on, he having bought that house from Harry Breen.

George Appleby, formerly manager of the Strand at Haverhill, has taken the Jefferson, Portland, Me., for himself.

The Gem theatre, Athol, was destroyed by fire which swept the entire Richardson block in that city on March 23.

The New Orpheum theatre, Tuft and Cross streets, Somerville, has opened. Feature pictures and vaudeville are billed.

Thevien theatre, New Bedford, for the past two or three years under the management of H. R. Lefebvre of the Orpheum theatre, has come under the control of Mrs. Cordelia Vien, the original owner and manager of the North End playhouse.

MISSOURI

The trustees of the Missouri Botanical Gardens of St. Louis, have purchased a lot on the corner of Grand avenue and Morgan street, with the intention of improving the property with a new theatre building in the near future. The property is now occupied by a one-story building, in which there are stores and shops, and an airdome in the rear, facing on Morgan street. When the lease expires on the airdome the theatre will be projected. The lot is 163 feet on Grand and 157 feet on Morgan street.

The Mikado theatre, 5955 Easton avenue, St. Louis, has been bought by the Scherrer Brothers, who have been operating the house for more than two years. The Scherrer brothers also own and operate the Palace, on Thirteenth and Franklin avenue, and the fact that they opened the Mikado, when that house had been running a vaudeville program at a loss for some time and worked up a straight picture program that finally enabled them to buy the property as a permanent investment, speaks well for the value of an all-picture bill. Henry Scherrer will devote his time to the Mikado, and William will be in charge of the Palace. No change is to be made in the policy of the two houses.

A tent show on Manchester avenue, in St. Louis, was destroyed by fire at half past three o'clock in the afternoon on Monday, April 3. The cause of the fire has not been discovered, but the damage is about $2,500.

William Scoville, manager of the Idle Four theatre, Twelfth and Grand, Kansas City, is erecting a large theatre to have a seating capacity of 1,200, at Eighteenth and Tracy, which will be for negroes only. Present plans contemplate other rooms in the building which will be a fireproof one. This will make the second theatre for colored people in Kansas City.

The former manager of the Sharp theatre at Richmond has been displaced by Willis Railey, a newcomer in the moving picture game. Under the latter's direction, the house is being redecorated and improved in various ways.

The Highland theatre, Thirty-first and Highland, Kansas City, has recently been sold to H. M. Kusel by Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Jenkins.

The Alamo theatre, Thirty-fourth and Main streets, Kansas City, has just completed a series of improvements that will now make it rank with the best of suburban houses. The place was entirely redecorated, all the walls and boxes being painted and refreshed; a four-piece orchestra has been installed to take the place of a pianist; a large, new electric sign has been erected in front; the lobby has been realtered and mahogany furniture and rugs and palms have been placed in it to make a reception room; a new black plush curtain has been put in on the stage and the house is very different than it was two months ago.

One of Kansas City's oldest playhouses, the Auditorium theatre, at Ninth and Holmes street, has been leased to George Brant, who will remodel it and change it to a moving picture house. The seating capacity is very large and the house is in the midst of a rooming-house district and should pay well.

NEW YORK

Beginning with the coming summer the X Amusement Company (Michael Frei) will operate an airdome at West 126th street and Manhattan avenue, New York City. Seating accommodations reach 3,000. The lease extends ten years.

Marcus Loew has bought the Eighty-sixth Street theatre, New York City, from B. S. Moss. It will be conducted as a straight picture house. Mr. Loew operates the Orpheum, opposite the Eighty-sixth Street.

M. J. Morris has control of the Park theatre, 46th and Sackett streets, Corona.

Manager William H. Buck has opened the Arbor motion picture theatre in Albany. It is located on the east side of North Swan street, between First and Second streets, and seats 1,000 comfortably.

Five thousand dollars' worth of damage was done by a fire in the Happy Hour theatre, South Center street, Schenectady, recently. Feinberg and Sylvester owned the theatre. Several reels of film were destroyed.

The Clinton theatre, Newburgh, has reopened.

The Clinton-Mortimer company will erect a theatre on Mortimer street, Rochester.

James P. and Alec P. Papayanakos are constructing a motion picture and vaudeville theatre at a cost of $100,000 on lower State street, Watertown.

Picture theatres are in the course of construction on State and Aurora streets, Ithaca. Both will be ready this summer.

OKLAHOMA

S. M. Curtis, formerly manager of the Grand theatre at Miami, has sold his house to Harry Montgomery. Mr. Montgomery owns the other theatre in Miami and is now the moving picture magnate of the vicinity.

PENNSYLVANIA

Hart's theatre, a combination vaudeville house at Frankford avenue and Norris street, in the Kensington district of Philadelphia, has been sold by the Hancock Building Association to Morris Somerson for a nominal consideration and a mortgage of $40,000. The building occupies a lot 72 by 120 feet, and seats 1,200 people. The new owner anticipates renovating the property and utilizing it as a first class picture house only.

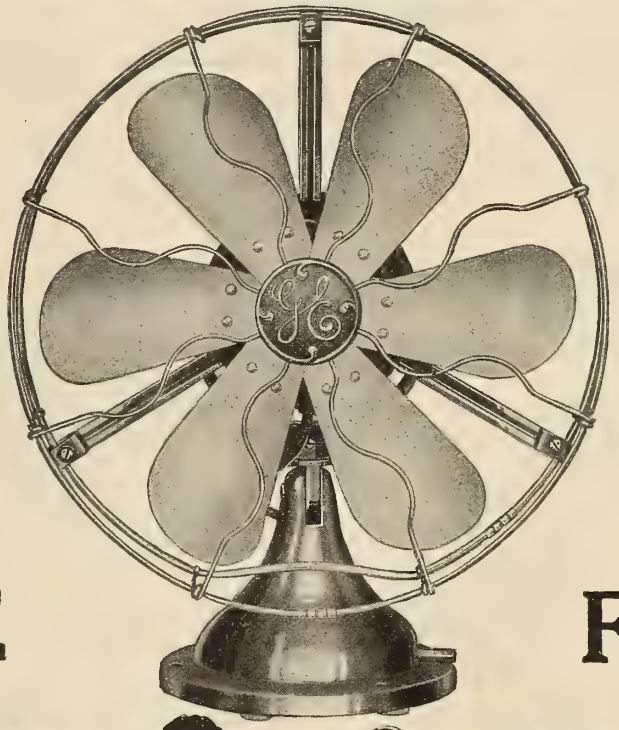
The Colonial motion picture theatre at Tenth and Ritner streets, Philadelphia, was conveyed by Charles Luber to Morris Gerson for a nominal sum, a ground rent of $240, and a mortgage of $9,000. The house, which is assessed at $12,000, has a frontage of 80 feet with an irregular depth, and seats 300.

H. E. Silk is now managing the Wayne theatre at 4910 Wayne avenue, Philadelphia, in place of M. Furman, who formerly was proprietor of the house. It has a capacity of 400 seats.

Fanny Feldman has bought from Harry Berman the Hippodrome, at 608 South street, Philadelphia. The assessed value of the house is $18,000, and there is a mortgage of $10,000. The lot is 20 by 120 feet, running back to Kater street. There are 400 seats.

Albert Brown, manager of the Overbrook, a 600-seated theatre at Sixty-third and Haverford avenue, Philadelphia, celebrated the second anniversary of the house by a week of specially arranged musical selections, unusually big features and an artistically colored program announcing these facts.

Dr. S. Steinberg, owner of the Strand at 1,200 Girard avenue, Philadelphia, has just returned from a visit to leading film studios in New York, which gave him inspiration and new ideas for running his theatre.



The passing of the Bijou Dream at 1205 Market street, Philadelphia, takes a "movie" landmark from the City of Brotherly Love. Opened as one of the first "store theatres" in the city, it had a ten years' profitable existence, first as a so-called nicolodeon and later with improvements as a regular five-cent house giving a service program.

E. D. Brown, owner of the Garden theatre at Pottsville, takes credit for the best live wire stunt recently encountered. His theatre burning down in the late afternoon, by evening he had bought the Victor, a rival house, rechristened it the Garden and went on showing films. At once the rehabilitation of the Garden was begun. The house of 900 seats was redecorated, organ music made the order of the day and two new Simplex machines installed.

Eddystone has been put on the motion picture map by a munition plant. When the Remington company placed a large number of workmen in this little town near Philadelphia, at once the need was felt for their amusement and pictures were introduced. J. M. Kennedy, a real estate man of Philadelphia, erected a theatre of 600 seats, and called it the Eclipse. This house has just been opened and has become popular, albeit a straight ten-cent price was established. J. Becker is manager. The theatre is attractively decorated and has been equipped

Who Will Answer All Questions You Send in, No Matter How Simple or How Difficult, Concerning All Phases of Operating, Electricity, Repairing and Equipment

HOW MUCH OVERLOAD IS SAFE TO CARRY FOR THREE OR FOUR HOURS?

A. E. H., Great Springs, Ill.—Will you kindly answer through your columns, the following:

I am using the following equipment, 8 H. P. gasoline engine and Triumph D. C. 3 K. W. generator, No. 16601 (I think number is defaced) Class B T—1,800 R. P. M. 125 volts, 24 amperes field rheostat, Cutler-Hammer, with following marks: Maximum amperes 1.5—.75, Minimum field ohms 100—Catalog No. 1165, Series No. 867925.

I have neither volt meter or ampere meter but regulate voltage by 110 volt lamps carrying field rheostat arm about ¾ way around. Generator runs at 1800 R. P. M. This gives a good clear light in 110-volt lamps of which I have about 500 watts that burn continuously. I carry 30 ampere plug fuses on switchboard.

Before striking arc I reduce voltage by means of field rheostat as low as possible, which I judge to be about 75 volts and by carrying arc rheostat on third pin from right (no name; think it is Power's 25 ampere rheostat) and using ½ solid bottom and ⅝ Cored top carbons I get along very well. Throw 10½-foot picture at 50 feet. (Power's No. 6 machine) and have very good light on screen. I recently got some new bottom carbons (Electra) and have had some trouble by blowing fuses when striking the arc. At one time I blew a 45-ampere fuse with the arc rheostat arm on the second pin from the right (least resistance). I am afraid to carry such heavy fuses for fear of overloading the generator and damaging it. What I would like to know is, would it be any lighter on the generator to still reduce voltage either by placing more resistance in series with the field rheostat or by reducing the speed and thereby increase the amperage? A 60-volt 3 K. W. generator will produce 50 amperes of current and I wondered if it were possible to convert my generator into a 60-volt machine capable of producing 40 or 50 amperes (safely) without rewinding the armature; the machine is compound wound. I believe, at least it has two sets of windings on field coils. I realize that this generator is not ideal for moving picture work and expect eventually to change it for one more suitable, but am trying now to learn the best plan for using the one I have. How much overload is it safe to carry for three or four hours?

ANS.—Your installation is of good quality and of fair capacity for the load you wish to carry and you should secure good results, but you are not going at it right.

If your engine is of 8 H. P. capacity it is powerful enough to drive your Triumph 3 K. W. generator.

Everything about your equipment is all right according to your statement, but in order to secure results you must do the following:

See that your engine governor is in proper condition and that it is properly adjusted, as I take it your engine has a trottling governor. Then set the speed of the engine so that your generator will be maintained at the speed of 1,800 R. P. M., which is called for on its nameplate. It is better for you to run the generator at 1,825 or 1,850 than below 1,800 and it should turn at this speed when you have full load on the generator and that is up to the engine to maintain this speed which depends upon the adjustment of its governor.

I would recommend that you purchase a volt and ampere meter, the cost of which on the panel would not amount to more than about thirty dollars for good high class instruments. If you are not in a position or do not desire to invest this amount of money to secure perfect record of what you are doing, the next good thing is to use a 110-V. Incandescent lamp as a pilot light by which you may judge the voltage as you are now doing.

Under no consideration reduce the voltage by means of the field controller when you start your arc. Keep your voltage up to 110.

If you have, as you believe, a Power's 25-ampere rheostat, your installation is complete as far as the moving picture machine is concerned because the Powers rheostat, if it is as you specify, for 25 amperes only, may allow you to draw 25 to 30 amperes when it is cold and then within 10 or 15 minutes, the amperage will drop to 25, which is the current you should maintain.

Judging by your description, however, it appears that your Powers rheostat is adjustable. If that is the case, it may be that your rheostat is adjustable from 25 to may be 35 or 40 amperes as the Powers Company do furnish such a rheostat with their No. 6 machines. If that is the case, then you in reality have a larger than 25 ampere rheostat and it then becomes necessary for you to cut in all of the resistance.

In other words, put the lever on the lowest ampere notch and start your arc. If the rheostat is of the 25-ampere size on the low notch, for operation on 110 volts, you will not blow your fuses providing you separate the carbons from ¼-inch to ½-inch, rather quickly. The method of separating the carbons quickly will in many instances prevent the blowing of your fuse which might happen if you leave the carbons together or close together for several seconds when you first strike the arc with the rheostat cold.

The use of an ampere meter which can be purchased for fifteen dollars would assist you materially in handling your arc, but if you are sure of your rheostat you need have no fear and it is not necessary for you to reduce the voltage on the generator.

When you have a generator designed for 110-volt operation, it should be maintained at that voltage and you are not relieving to any appreciable extent the load on such a generator when you lower the voltage as the armature has to do practically the same work because the amperes remain the same, but the field coils will run slightly cooler with less amperes at a lower voltage.

The engine is the part of your system which has to stand up and carry a greater load if you keep the voltage up to 110 and leave all of the resistance in the Powers' rheostat in series with your arc as it should be.

It will do you no good to lower the voltage to 60 as far as the generator is concerned, because you can never take more than 30 amperes continuously out of your generator.

As a matter of fact, the normal ampere output of your generator which is wound for 110 to 115 volts, is between 27 and 28 amperes but most of the good generators like the Triumph are made to stand an overload of 25 per cent for a period of an hour or so, and I should imagine that you could run the generator at an overload of 10 per cent for a couple of hours without doing it injury and further, if you desire to put a fan motor on the commutator end of the generator forcing the heat generated at the commutator and armature through the machine, you could no doubt draw as much as 35 amperes from your generator without doing it injury, but you could never get 50 amperes out of the same without rewinding the armature for 60 volts as you suggested.

If you operate 500 watts in incandescent lamps I should say that you ought to make sure that your arc does not at any time take over 25 amperes and then I would fuse the generator with about 35-ampere fuses and if your rheostat in series with the arc is of the right kind and in good condition you should not blow the 35-ampere fuses as your load would hardly exceed 30 amperes.

J. G. NICHOLS

Cattaraugus, N. Y., January 29, 1916.

Gentlemen:

I am much pleased with the results obtained thus far with "SPEER" Carbons. Of course, I have not used enough of them so that I can judge the whole shipment, but if they run uniform with the ones which I have used, they will be very satisfactory indeed, in fact believe that they are ahead of the Bio carbons which I have been using, and which I considered the best I could buy. I will be glad to recommend your product to any exhibitors that I may have the opportunity, as I am for material "MADE IN AMERICA." You are at liberty to use this testimonial if you wish.

Yours truly,

It is not well to overload any electric machine for the period of three or four hours, but I have no doubt that your generator would carry 5 to 10 per cent overload for that period.

I do not believe that the changing of your carbons had anything to do with your fuse blowing. On the other hand, I believe that you are doing the wrong thing when you lower the generator voltage and cut out resistance in series with the arc. You should do just the opposite. Raise or keep the generator voltage constant at 110 and cut in resistance in series with the arc.

HAS EMERSON MOTOR AND POWER'S 6-A WITH MOTOR ATTACHMENT

E. L. M., Arlington, O.:—I have a good Emerson motor with a speed of 1150 R. P. M. I also have a Power's 6-A machine with motor attachment. Would you please tell me what size pulley should be used on this speed motor to give the picture machine about 60 turns to minute. Would like to see answer in next week's News.

Ans.—The Power's 6-A or 6-B motor attachment is provided with a pulley approximately 2½ in. in diameter for round belt.

When the motor attachment pulley is driven at the speed of 640 R. P. M. it will turn the machine at sufficient speed to pass a thousand-foot film within about 20 minutes.

When this same machine is driven by the attachment, the pulley of which operates at 1,100 R. P. M., it will pass 1000 feet of film within about 12½ minutes.

I should say that 60 turns on the crank handle will pass an ordinary reel within about 15 minutes. That would indicate a speed of about 1,000 R. P. M., on the 2½ in. pulley of the motor attachment, and to accomplish this result with your Emerson motor operating at the speed of 1,150 R. P. M., you would want approximately a 2¼ in. pulley on the motor.

It seems to me that you ought to have some means for controlling the speed, but if your motor is non-adjustable, I would recommend that you provide yourself with 3 pulleys, one 2 in. for slow speed; one 2¼ in. for medium speed, and one 2½ in. for the highest speed. I believe, however, that a pulley between 2 in. and 2¼ in. is about what you want. Much depends upon the slippage of the belt and the exact speed of your motor. Ordinary A. C. motors cause variation in the speed, depending upon the quality of the film. Some films take much more power to drive, and others less, but you will find the above size pulleys a correct average.

GRADUATE OF ELECTRICAL SCHOOL WANTS EMPLOYMENT

R. E. Guthrie, Washington, D. C.:—I will be a graduate of the Bliss Electrical School in June. Being very much interested in the moving picture business, I thought I would like to go back for a few years.

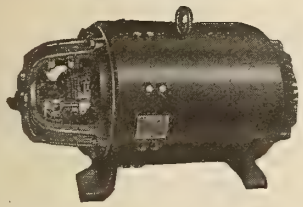
Knowing you are interested in the operators, I thought that you might be able to let me know of some good theatres which are looking for good operators with some electrical knowledge. I might say that the theatre in which I was previously employed only runs in the summer season.



Ans.—I reprint the above letter so that others who perhaps are following the same line of study as Mr. Guthrie may know what this department thinks of propositions like that set forth by Mr. Guthrie.

I believe that the electrical training is of utmost importance because at least 50 per cent. of the success of picture projection lies in or depends upon a thorough knowledge of the electric arc and the means for its control and maintenance.

At the same time, I want Mr. Guthrie and other students to know that the mechanical proposition involved is equally important and, furthermore, practical experience extending over a period of at least a year is necessary before one can hope to become an efficient operator.

It is evident that a man possessing high-class electrical knowledge and one who is also informed on mechanical propositions, will learn to become an operator in a shorter time than one who has not enjoyed this kind of education, but it is equally true that one who possesses the mechanical and electrical knowledge cannot be a good operator until he has had the actual experience besides, and this is one of the points which is often overlooked,

SILHOUETTED CUTOUTS OF CHAPLIN AND WILLARD FROM BRADY POSTER COMPANY

ONE of the most novel lobby display features which has been put out in some time is that which is being distributed by the Dick Brady Poster Rental Company of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City.

These displays are silhouetted cutouts on heavy blue steel of Charlie Chaplin and Jess Willard.

They can be placed in any part of the lobby and if near the sidewalk the casual observer would think that the comedian or the prize fighter were there in person.

The success which these cutouts are having, according to reports, is phenomenal.

SYMPATHY FOR VETERANS CREATES DELICATE SITUATION IN CALGARY

THE present strike in Calgary, Alberta with returned soldiers taking the places of the striking union operators, has created a situation of unlimited possibilities, and has caused widespread discussion of the possible outcome. The Calgary Albertan, in an editorial analysis of the situation, has the following to say:

"The situation is an exceedingly delicate one, and must be handled with a very great deal of tact. It is a problem bound to arise, but it has come sooner than many expected.

"The delicate situation is caused through the sympathy which the public in general—quite properly—has with the returned veteran, and the general desire to see him placed in a remunerative occupation. However, it is a very serious matter if in order to secure such occupations competent men must be thrown out of positions and labor unions destroyed.

"If union men can be replaced by returned veterans in this instance, it will be only a matter of time when every trade union in Canada will be destroyed, and the very satisfactory work done by labor people for many years—satisfactory for both the men and their employers—will tumble down. That is something which must not be allowed to occur.

"The British army is a labor army. There must be no trouble between the army and organized labor, and under existing conditions, it is threatening."

J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen theatre, and representing the affected theatres, states that no union men were dismissed, but that those who are now out of work struck of their own volition because the managers would not agree to employ only union men, and to increase the wages of the men already employed. Mr. Cronk also points out that the soldiers who were trained in operating were destined for possible positions outside of Calgary, as there was no thought of making a rule of superseding union men with veterans.

WORKMEN HASTEN CONSTRUCTION TASK ON CIRCLE, INDIANAPOLIS, FOR EARLY OPENING

THE Circle theatre, which is being constructed in Monument place, Indianapolis, at a cost of about $225,000, is growing like a mushroom under the hands of the many brick masons and structural steel workers. The present efforts are being directed to the rear wall of the huge stage in the Court street side of the building, while the steel workers are setting up the first of the columns.

Harry E. Smith, who is superintending the construction work, is speeding up the activities with the intention of having the photoplay house under roof by April 20, and says that the task will be accomplished if the weather permits.

By the time the theatre is completed 1,000,000 brick will have been placed and about 300,000 of them already have gone into the walls. While the foundation of concrete has been poured, before the house is finished 1,800 yards of this material will have been handled. Chief among the structural feats will be the placing of 300 tons of steel, including a central girder weighing 40,000 pounds. Seventy-five tons of reinforcing steel also will be used.

Some unusual structural feats are being performed in the building under Mr. Smith's direction. One of these is in setting the structural frame of cantilever type. The cantilevers are not being carried across the center in the usual manner, but are carried from the main columns of steel which support the immense gallery girder, leaving an entirely clear room for the mezzanine floor.

In speeding up the construction, a huge framework of pine has been erected along the Court street wall, from which a scaffold, or platform, is supported by steel cables. As the wall rises at the rate of about five feet a day, the brickmasons wind up the cable and lift their platform to the desired level. This scaffolding scheme has enabled the brickmasons to save much time and hasten the heavy work on the building. While this great wall is going up, another of brick, which forms the stage opening, is under way.

OHIO.

The Melba theatre at Detroit avenue and West 117th street, Cleveland, reopened recently after undergoing alterations which almost amounted to reconstruction. The seating accommodation has been practically doubled and now exceeds 1,000, new boxes have been put in and the modern improvements include an up-to-date heating and ventilating plant and a Minusa screen. The screen, by the way, is the largest in Cleveland.

OKLAHOMA.

The New Liberty theatre has been opened at Oklahoma City, at a cost of about $90,000. The Liberty is strictly modern and up to date and would be a credit to any of the larger cities of the United States. It is the intention to run features at the Liberty.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Mulvey Brothers are building a motion picture theatre on the site of the old opera house at Madison. The house will seat 900 and will cost $35,000.

James Dundas has sold the Maynard theatre at Mitchell to George W. Rickman.

Mrs. J. M. Sanford is the new manager of the Empress theatre at Chamberlain.

TENNESSEE

Additional information with respect to the proposed $75,000 motion picture theatre, to be erected in Chattanooga by the Signal Amusement Company, is that it will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The new theatre will be known as the Empire and will be built so that road attractions or either Stair and Havelin productions can be put on. The plans are to make the Colonial motion picture theatre a combination house, so that it can be used for vaudeville or stock, as well as for motion pictures. It will seat 1,200 people.

TEXAS.

The Grand theatre, at Ennis, one of the best in the southwest, is having an additional story and gallery added, together with boxes. The improvements are estimated to cost $8,000.

J. L. Schultz has opened a new picture house at Thalia.

J. J. O'Malley will open a new moving picture house at Sweetwater in the near future.

L. G. Bissinger is renovating the Washington theatre at Dallas and making a number of improvements. A new electric sign has been ordered and will be installed as soon as received.

E. A. Henderson has been appointed receiver for the Hippodrome theatre at Dallas.

Mart Cole of the Dreamland theatre in West, will build another theatre at that place in the near future, which is to seat seven hundred and will be strictly modern and up to date.

E. A. Kinney has opened his new theatre at Belton and reports business good.

R. A. Carter has leased the Roseland theatre at Dallas and will change from vaudeville to pictures.

The Princess theatre at San Antonio has changed from straight pictures to Pantages' vaudeville and feature pictures.

Jake Burke, manager of the Grand Opera House, San Antonio, has reopened his theatre and will show feature pictures.

Picture theatre will be opened May 1 in La Grange by Abe Ginsburg. Seating capacity to be 600. It is to be the first real picture theatre in La Grange.

Raw Film Stocks and Their Points of Difference

For Guidance of Those Who Do Not Possess the Knowledge of the Expert Laboratory or Cameraman, the Characteristics of the Leading Makes Are Pointed Out—Reduction of Imports by European War Limits Choice of Brands

BEFORE the present European war had diverted the industrial energies of the nations involved, and cut down the imports from the warring countries, the film producers and laboratories had their choice of a considerable number of makes of raw film, both negative and positive, to take and print their pictures on.

For the guidance of those who do not possess the knowledge of the expert laboratory or cameraman, the characteristics and differences of the leading makes of film stock are here given.

Of all the film stock obtainable, the Eastman film, made at Rochester, by the Kodak Company, is the most in favor, and the results yielded by it are unsurpassed.

The Eastman negative stock is very rapid, being surpassed in speed by the Pathé stock only. Like all the motion picture negative films it is chiefly sensitive to the blue and violet rays such as are emitted by studio lights. While not corrected for other colors the Eastman negative film gives the best all around color rendition and gradation, hence its popularity.

The Eastman positive stock, like their negative stock, is the result of years of experimenting and vast money expenditures. It has the richest and best ripened emulsion of all the positive stocks and yields prints showing beautiful warm blacks, when developing in a properly compounded bath. It is susceptible to tinting or toning to any color conceivable.

Two Varieties of Eastman Raw Stock

There are two variations of the Eastman raw stock. They prepare their negative film with a special soluble coating, said to be gelatine, on the back or celluloid side. This film is called X Back and has been found to greatly reduce static troubles, although it does not eliminate them entirely. The Eastman people also supply their positive emulsion on a special fireproof base of the cellulose-acetate character. Their fireproof stock has been found to be as durable as any other and it does not swell or stretch in benig developed with consequent uneven shrinkage when dried. This non-flame stock is called Eastman Safety Film.

The Kodak firm has in the final stages of perfecting, a Panchromatic negative stock for the photographing of things which must show correct color values, or for use in securing the negative records for natural color processes. The limited quantities of this Panchromatic negative stock which the Eastman people have allowed to go out have yielded splendid results.

The well known film producing firm of Pathé Frêres have for some years been making raw motion picture film at their largest works situated at Vincennes, in the vicinity of Paris, France. There they have vast plants devoted to the manufacture of raw stock, a specialty with them being non-inflammable stock, the use of which in France and many other European countries is compulsory by law.

The Pathé negative stock leads them all in speed, being approximately one-third again as fast as is the Eastman negative film. Such great speed, however, is obtained at the expense of some loss in color rendition and the emulsion is inclined to be somewhat coarse in grain. The work of a good photographer on Pathé stock, also properly developed, will, however, stand up in comparison with any negative stock.

Positive film of the Pathé make yields results on a par with the Eastman brand when properly handled, having a rich and properly matured emulsion. The Pathé positive stock is supplied on a celluloid base and also as noted above on a fireproof base, this being acetate of cellulose.

A very popular brand of positive stock has always been the "Agfa" stock, made at the Greppin Works of the "Actien Gesellschaft für Anilinfabrikation," in Germany. This firm also makes a negative film stock of considerably less speed than the Eastman negative. It is also inferior in tone, rendering and gradation and has rarely been used here in America.

Merits of "Agfa" Stock

Until such time as importers of the same ceased, however, the "Agfa" positive stock enjoyed considerable popularity, due to its good wearing qualities. While possessing a fairly rich emulsion, the rich warm blacks cannot be secured on "Agfa" positive film without resorting to a contrasty developer. "Agfa" positive is also made on a non-flam base.

The well known Lumiere film stock is coated at the works of the "Societe des Celluloses Planchon" at Lyons, France, the emulsions being supplied by the well known firm of Lumiere Bros., also of Lyons. Lumiere stock was the backbone of the independent film producers of this country a few short years ago. When the Independent movement started the Licensed Manufacturers had the entire Eastman output contracted for.

Therefore the Lumiere film will always be well remembered. The positive stock has a very fine grained emulsion. The prints made on it are contrasty with a tendency toward lack of detail in the high lights.

The Lumiere Green Label negative stock, also fine grained, is much slower than the Pathé and Eastman negative stocks, but is relished by many cameramen for taking exteriors. There is also supplied a very rapid orthochromatic negative film coated with the famous Lumiere "Sigma" emulsion, which is suitable for dark days and interiors with poor lighting.

The house of Gevaert in Belgium formerly supplied several novelties in raw stock for motion picture purposes. They furnished a negative stock of medium speed with a green preparation on the celluloid side to prevent halation in working against the light. This was called "Anti-Halo" negative film. The Gevaert firm also supplied positive stock, some of which was coated on celluloid colored red, yellow, etc., throughout. This saved the necessity of tinting subjects printed on such film.

Before closing we must mention the "Ensign" or Austin Edwards film stock, a British product. While the Austin Edwards positive stock has seen very little use in this country, the negative stock of this maker is favorably known. The Ensign negative film possesses the finest grain of any Cine negative film known. It gives superb gradations and the color values are equal to any make of negative film.

The war has affected the imports of the Lumiere, Agfa, Gevaert and Austin Edwards film stocks and they are not procurable at present, excepting occasionally in very small quantities.

THEATRE ACTIVITIES IN OHIO

F. C. FOCHT has bought the Empire theatre, Lima, from Mr. Georgiore. Mr. Focht also manages the house.

A picture theatre is to be incorporated in the Tod House, being built at Youngstown. Fred Ullman, lessee, announces that the theatre will be called the Strand.

HOW CAN NEGATIVE FILM BE EFFECTIVELY REVERSED INTO POSITIVE FILM?

J. L. R., No. 204 Keap St., Brooklyn, N. Y.—Will you kindly explain, through your department, how negative film can most effectively be reversed into positive film? As an amateur photographer, I require only one positive, and I am anxious to produce same as cheaply as possible.

I am very much interested in your department, and am confident that it will prove of value to cameramen in general.

ANSWER.—We thank the Brooklyn correspondent for his interest and assure him that the department is going to benefit the cameramen, provided they study it.

In regard to the reversing of cinematograph negatives into positives quite some experimenting has been done and much has been written on the subject, but practical working formulae have been lacking.

A. L. Smith of Portland, Ore., has had great success with a negative reversing process and it was given out that the Economy Cinematographers Specialty Company of that city were willing to sell such formulae. Although the editor of this department has written the above concern on two occasions he has never received a reply.

A formula is hereby given which will do the trick, however, together with working instructions.

In exposing negatives to be subsequently reversed more exposure time must be given, to avoid extreme contrasts in the finished positive. With process here given half a point more time should be allowed. Thus if normal exposure were f. 11. place the diaphram indicator midway between f. 8. and f. 11.

The formulae for the ensuing operations are given in small quantities as tests should be made on short lengths of film until you have gotten the process working satisfactorily.

First develop the film in Solution No. 1.—Hydrokinone, ½ oz.; potass. metabisulphite, ½ oz., and water, 20 oz.

Solution No. 2.—Caustic potash, 1 oz.; water, 20 oz. Use Solution one One Part, Solution two One Part.

Having developed the film to good density, which does not take long in this solution, wash the film for a minute in running water and then place in a 10 per cent. solution of ammonium persulphate (in water) for a period of one minute. The film is again washed for a minute in running water and will be ready for reversal.

Reversal and all operations following must not be done in the dark room, but with the lights on, or in a daylit room preferably.

For reversal use the following: Solution A.—Potassium permanganate, 36 grains; water, 20 oz. Solution B.—Sulphuric acid, 160 drops; water, 20 oz. For use take equal parts Place the film in this and let it remain until the images have entirely disappeared, which can be told by looking at the back or celluloid side of the film and noting when all the black has gone.

Now the film must be redeveloped in a solution compounded as follows:

Sulphite of soda, ¼ oz.; water, 10 oz.; amidol, 30 grains; potass. bromide, 50 %. Solution 1¼ oz. If Amidol is not to be had Metol may be used in the redeveloper.

The film is now redeveloped until good density is attained, which should not take long, allowance being made for the usual slight loss of density in fixing, and washed for about two minutes.

Now fix the film in a solution of 4 oz. of Hypo to 20 oz. of water or in other words a 20 per cent. Hypo solution. After the film has had a good washing such as is always given after fixing, it may be dried, and is ready to be viewed. As with all reversed negatives the edges or sprocket holes will now be black instead of clear as in regular positive prints.

Reversed negatives cannot be expected to equal a good positive print, and most examples of such work show the whites badly veiled over. With sufficient practice the formulae here given will, however, give reasonably clear highlights and yields positive of good projecting quality.

We do not personally look with favor upon reversing negatives, as with this power in his hands the amateur cameraman is liable to start exposing film promiscuously on subjects of no consequence.

If a subject is worth photographing, at all, the negative of same is liable to have some value, and at a future time another print of the subject may be in great demand.

Mr. Reid is invited to send in samples of his work with this process at any time and if they are not just right upon examination of same we can suggest the proper remedy.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS DISPLAY ON A FORTY-SECOND STREET NEWS-STAND, NEW YORK

INTERESTING EVENTS ARRANGED FOR MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' EXPOSITION IN NEW YORK, MAY 1 TO 6

THE following communication has been received from the headquarters at 218 West Forty-second street of the Marion Picture Exposition League of New York:

"With the usual ability to provide interesting events as well as a thorough trade show in every way, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League are rapidly completing their Third Annual Exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York, May 1 to 6.

"The idea is to bring at one time and under one roof all of the various branches of the Motion Picture Industry, which the exhibitor at large supports. The exposition will, without doubt, be the most complete trade show of any kind ever held.

"It, of course, is well understood that it is the exhibitor who buys film service, chairs, screens, machines, carbons, musical instruments and everything that goes to make the motion picture business what it is and one can readily realize the hearty endorsement which the exhibitors will give to the show, not because of the fact that they are giving this show but of the fact that they will be in a position to purchase anything and everything needed in the daily operation of their business.

"It is the only exposition that has been endorsed by the organized exhibitors, and it is the only one which they will attend.

"There are a great many interesting events arranged for the public at large, as well. A separate day will be given over entirely to the German side of the war question, and another day to the Allies' side. Still another day will be set aside for the actors' fund and a percentage of the gross receipts will be donated to these various bodies.

"Local consuls will be in direct charge of the distribution of the funds and also lend their aid to bring together the various societies to attend, as well as bands from the interned liners and their officers who will attend the body in full regalia.

"One has but to visit the offices of the League to understand the elegant manner in which the operation of this trade show has been organized. Contracts already in hand, assure the unqualified success of the show, the most interesting fact being that most of these contracts have been obtained unsolicited.

"The exhibitors have always been highly successful in the conduct of their expositions and entertainments and this one, the third exposition has all the earmarks already of being without any doubt the most successful trade show of the motion picture industry that has ever been held."

The Cinema Says:

The Motion Picture News, by the way, has recently started a British edition, the feature of which is an "Impartial Review Chart," in which the quality of films is indicated by a somewhat arbitrary system of classification. The idea underlying the British edition is good, and the possibilities contained in it are manifold, but we doubt if the present form of the publication quite hits the mark. From an announcement in the News it appears that Mr. Reginald Warde, late of Harma and Co., on this side, is in charge of the section devoted to British exhibitors, and perhaps the venture will improve when he gets into his stride. Certainly few men are better qualified to undertake such a difficult task.

A candid and expert opinion which we give in toto.

The British Edition of Motion Picture News is growing each week in interest and value to the exhibitor throughout Great Britain.

Coming each week from the headquarters of production it gives an expert selection and impartial valuation of pictures about to be exported to Great Britain—News notes concerning these pictures—reviews—and all the advance news of American production.

HENDERSON WARNS CHURCH ORGANISTS AGAINST UNSUITABLE MUSIC FOR PICTURE THEATRES

THE following communication received from Herbert Henderson, known as an organist and orchestra leader, is very timely. Not only has a demand for theatre organists increased, but many organists in the country are suddenly realizing that the motion picture has opened a new and large field for their musical endeavors.

Musical students who have confined their endeavors to organ work are as a rule well taught and capable musicians. Regardless of this fact, they meet numerous obstacles when they endeavor to make their talents of value to picture theatre music.

The communication from Mr. Henderson which follows should be of interest to all organists:

"The steady growth in the numbers of organs being installed in picture houses is opening a new and lucrative field for the musician who favors that type of instrument, and has caused many pianists to take up the study of this new factor in the motion picture world. Perhaps it is not too much to say that there is no instrument capable of such varied and beautiful combinations of tone color as the modern organ, but it is equally true that the tremendous resources which the organist has at his command are a pitfall from which even the most experienced do not always escape.

"The following remarks are not intended to be in any sense dogmatic, but rather as a few short notes on what in the writer's opinion are the most common shortcomings of the motion picture organist, with a few suggestions for their remedy.

"The present tendency seems to be for the organist to use his opportunities as a means of thrusting on the audience the fact that he is a capable performer on his instrument.

"The temptation to do this is admittedly strong, but it must be born in mind that the sole idea of music with the pictures is to give suggestive support and not to swamp it with totally irrevelant matter.

"If a recital is to be given get your manager to set apart a special time for it. This is being done in many cases, and is, generally speaking, much appreciated.

"Many organists come straight from church work—where they may have been most successful—to playing for pictures, and attempt to apply the same ideas with disastrous results. As an instance, the writer recently heard an organist illustrate a comedy with the following numbers: Andantino, Lemare; soccatto, Widor; Fugue in G min., Bach.; prelude and Fugue in D min., Mendelssohn.

"They were all well played on a fine instrument, but were about the best example of wasted energy possible.

"If the music has already been arranged, assume that that arrangement is the best until you can prove to your own satisfaction to the contrary. If from a musical point of view the arrangement seems poor, remember they are usually compiled by men who have had ample opportunity of studying the various dramatic situations.

"If left to your own resources go easy for the first run off, make mental notes of the general character and atmosphere of the plot, and then work out a musical scheme for the whole. It is a most useful thing to keep a tabulated list of compositions under their different headings for ready reference.

These lists gradually added to will in a short time constitute an extensive repetoire for any situation that may arise.

"Bear in mind that organ tone will, however beautiful the quality, pall on the listener unless it is being constantly varied. Without becoming "restless" change the color as much as possible, in short, orchestrate everything you play. Avoid the use of too much "full organ." Reserve it for big situations and strive, while not letting the interest flag, to keep your playing under the picture.

Listen to other organists as often as possible and hear your own organ played by someone else. Some organs are so badly placed that it is impossible for the player to form any idea of what effect he is producing.

In one case an organist had the delightful experience of playing for some months with the console at the back of the stage, the pipes in the pit, and a twenty-five piece orchestra all round him. Although happily this is an extreme case, the fact remains that some organ builders are willing and ready to sell their organs at any cost and leave the question of its position until the actual instalment. The sooner it is realized that a really fine instrument can be, and often is, ruined by this means, the better it will be for everybody concerned.

"In conclusion, I would suggest that those whose organs are fitted with trap-work—drums, cymbals, castanets—should use these effects very sparingly. They are very valuable at times—especially for comedy work, but there is a tendency to use them to excess. I have seen on more than one occasion, dramatic effects, not only spoiled, but made positively ridiculous by the apparent feverish desire on the part of the organist to attempt an illustration of every trivial event that takes place on the screen.

"The worst case of this that ever came under the writer's notice, although not a picture house, will serve to show to what flights of imagination it is possible to soar. After the organist had played the overture for a legitimate comedy, he gave a train imitation to illustrate the rising of the curtain.

"Let us strive to be artistic, not some of the time, but all of the time.

TEMPERAMENT VARIES TOO MUCH FROM DAY TO DAY FOR SUCCESSFUL IMPROVISING

Editor Music Department Motion Picture News:

Dear Sir—I am very much interested in your articles in respect to music and the picture, and the various comments arising in the columns devoted to that purpose. I suppose no two musicians think alike on the whole, yet I must say that your ideas in general seem as identical with my own as can possibly be expected.

I for one am absolutely against entire improvision for pictures. The musician who attempts to improvise solely (and there are few who make a success) is up against numerous natural obstacles, the chief of which are: (a) Varying daily temperament; (b) constantly repeating oneself; (c) disconnectedness.

I don't think it wise to go into detail over these three reasons. First, for lack of space, and, secondly, because the reasons explain themselves.

The public are daily becoming more and more enlightened in the art of music, and are naturally expecting to hear something known to them, during a program. Furthermore, the demand is becoming more general for a printed program of music, surely a great sign of the times.

In your issue of February 5, Mr. Anderson's letter interested me exceedingly, mostly in respect to "The Cabaret Scene." I also am not in accord with breaking in upon the two-step to play a few bars of pathetic. The whole scene is suggestive of the cabaret. You immediately cause discord in the audience's mind when you suddenly break from a two-step to pathetic. Stick to the main scene, the cabaret and pianissimo when your principals enact a scene other than in accordance with the main issue. This brings up the argument in respect to connecting a written program by "modulation"—which I have noticed argued in your columns.

If the artist is an exceptionally well versed theorist, then maybe modulate, but I consider the cut and dried rules too stereotyped, and a little break is a relief to audience and player, I consider. It may serve well in short features of from two and three reels, but the continual playing in a five reel feature gets at times very monotonous.

When it is absolutely essential to connect pieces for the picture, I prefer to choose my music in corresponding keys to get away from the modulation. I enclose you samples of my program. I am a strong upholder of play-written music wherever possible for the picture, and the only places I find it necessary to improvise is in "struggles," "hurries" and such like; then only if they are of short duration.

I have to apologize for a lengthy letter, and I should like to write pages more, but I hope to have the privilege granted me from time to time; therefore, I reluctantly stop at this. May I ask for a few more Paramount suggested programs? We are using Paramount features exclusively, and I need hardly say they are excellent.

Yours very truly,

PERCY S. BURRASTON.

NOTED SWEDISH ORGANIST ENGAGED FOR TUDOR THEATRE, NEW ORLEANS

BELIEVING that musical accompaniment is of paramount importance to the running of the film, Josiah Pearce & Sons, motion picture magnates of New Orleans, have secured the services of Professor Ernest Tristrom, noted Swedish organist, member of one of the most noted musical families in Sweden, and brother of Behr Tristrom, assistant teacher in the Royal Academy at Stockholm, who made his bow to the music lovers of the Crescent City at the helm of the $25,000 organ in the Tudor theatre.

First, a careful study of the picture, then, with equal care and preciseness, the selection of the musical numbers best suited for the sentimental passages, the comedy element, not overlooking the importance of correct compositions for the sensational features, is advocated and put into practice by Prof. Tristrom.

"This is essential," said Prof. Tristrom, in an interview with MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "for too frequently is the mistake made in playing a wedding march in a love scene, or a ragtime number when a funeral march would be more appropriate. One is just as inappropriate as the other and immediately kills the effect of the very point the author and producer intended to bring out.

"In other words," continued the Tudor organist, "you must hit the soul of the picture; get the effects out of the picture. By that I mean it is necessary for the musician to dramatize the picture. Accomplish this and you have no difficulty whatever in winning the sympathies of your audiences."

Professor Tristrom has been playing the pipe organ since he was twelve years old. He studied under great masters of his own country and has been in America a number of years, practically all of the time teaching. It was only the highly financially attractive offer of the Pearce syndicate that brought Prof. Tristrom to New Orleans and motion pictures.

High-priced organs and organists are a rare sight in Southern motion picture theatres. One young woman of indifferent musical capabilities, plus a yard of chewing gum and a piano, were once sufficient. The demand for better music grew as motion pictures grew, probably in proportion. Two, or even three, musicians, a piano, violin and drummer, afterwards was a sight not uncommon in a motion picture show. Big houses commenced to use larger orchestras, but soon it was seen that something was lacking.

Then the era of the tin-panny piano was gone, and in its stead came the organ. There are hundreds and thousands of people in the United States to whom the appeal of organ music, properly rendered, is just as strong as the appeal of pictures.

ALL Kimball Organs are masterpieces, whether they consist in a carefully selected group of orchestral tones for a house seating less than five hundred or whether they contain every instrument that can be utilized in the most exacting picture and enough of them to fill the largest auditorium with musical sound. The electrical mechanism is quick, accurate, dependable and puts the whole instrument as completely under the domination of the organist as the symphony orchestra the conductor.

Effect Notes: At end of No. 7 an imitation of a heavy mine blast is necessary. At end of No. 10 a single pistol shot is very important. During Nos. 17 and 18 stock ticker imitations are permissible. The usual tumult, not overdone, is permissible during the hurries and agitato.

Music Notes: This picture creates great opportunities for the best melodramatic effects. The heart interest moments make possible the contrasting of musical temperament in your program. Care should be taken in having numbers for your pathetic and romantic appeals that have musical depth. Avoid all numbers having the slightest frivolous appeal.

No. 1 should be a light 2/4 intermezzo for opening. No. 3 should be a medium slow number. Not necessarily legato. Nos. 5, 11, 13, 17, 19, 23 and 25 should all be slow numbers having a positive pathetic appeal with a dramatic suggestion.

No. 21 must be a slow number having a positive dramatic appeal. Nos. 6 and 27 must be slow waltzes. The first number should have theme in minor key. Nos. 8, 12, 18 and 26 must be galops of hurried effect. Avoid galops of polka temperament. No. 14 should be a concert waltz with a slow introduction. No. 15 a light 2/4 descriptive number. No. 16 should be a 4/4 light number of concert caprice style. Nos. 2, 4, 7, 9, 10, 22 and 24 are short melodramatic numbers as suggested in plot.

The organ is appropriate for any of the slow movements. The dramatic effects are better obtained with orchestra.

Building and Furnishings

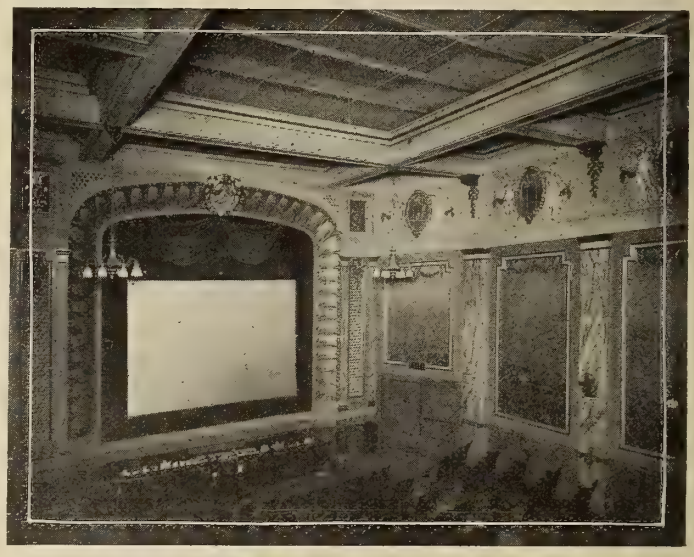
Edited by Nathan Myers

Your Theatre Must Be Artistic and Practical

Combination of These Qualities Is Evident in the Ideal, Forty-fourth Street and Eighth Avenue, New York City—Its External Appearance and Interior Decorations Make It Distinctive Structure in Neighborhood, While Means Observed for Comfort of Patrons Constitute Magnet of Drawing Power

WHEN moving pictures jumped into popularity a few years ago, there were no buildings which really met their needs. The first shows were given in altered or nondescript buildings which provided working accommodations; but beyond that the plan and design of these had little or no merit. The fronts were often merely made up of metal sheets, with some ordinary pattern pressed on them, or else gaudily and untastefully painted; they had little in their design to express the purpose for which the building was being used, beyond a certain "bizarreness." Often old theatres were adopted for the use of moving pictures, but in these the change and makeshifts were so obvious that the theatre did not convey the impression of being given over to the production of motion pictures.

With the increasing demand for this kind of amusement and the introduction of capital into the business, architects and builders, in co-operation with the managers, began to solve the problems peculiar to this form of entertainment, with the result that many buildings are now being erected for the sole purpose of exhibiting pictures, which meet the requirements in an almost complete way. New systems and devices for the lighting, heating and ventilating are constantly being brought out, so that an even more perfect theatre than now existing may be looked for.



EXTERIOR OF THE IDEAL THEATRE, 44th STREET AND EIGHTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

Evolution of New Style for Building Takes Time

The evolution of a new character in the architecture of a building which is being used for an entirely new purpose is a thing which takes time to work out.

It is true the general character of the requirements of a moving picture theatre are much the same as those of an ordinary theatre, so a great difference in the final artistic expression is not to be looked for. Accordingly, architects have gone to the old theatres for their inspiration and proto-type in trying to find the proper solution for this newer kind of theatre. By one who has followed the development a new style or character will have been noticed to show itself, which is to be hoped will continue, along with the employment of better taste in treatment—a side that has real commercial value in increasing the patronage according to some managers.

INTERIOR OF THE IDEAL THEATRE, NEW YORK

A very fine theatre from practical and artistic standpoints is the Ideal Theatre at Forty-fourth street and Eighth avenue, New York, designed by Simeon B. Eisendrath, of 500 Fifth avenue. This theatre, built in 1915, is among the best of those which have been put up with the purpose of producing moving pictures solely; the plan and all the conveniences have been determined with this one object in view so that it is one well worthy of serious study to anyone building a theatre. Mr. Eisendrath is an architect thoroughly acquainted with the problems of this type of building and has incorporated several devices which add materially to the pleasure and comfort of the theatre-goers.

The exterior with its large central motif, where the entablature of the side bays carries up to form an arch, a feature characteristically French, is dignified and inspiring, while still retaining the lightness a building of this type requires. The detail suggests also the purpose of the building. The walls are of red brick with the pilasters, entablature, and other details of white terra cotta which was supplied by the New York Terra Cotta Company. The space in front on the street level has been well divided to afford room for stores at either side of the entrance which is ample for all purposes; an arrangement well worth considering in every case.

Handling Crowds Made Easy

The large marquis, extending over the sidewalk, gives convenient shelter around the ticket booth, in which an automatic ticket seller is installed. These are of great value both in the ease of handling crowds and to the management. The lobby which is about 14 feet wide and 24 feet long, quite ample, is divided down the center by a brass railing to keep the crowds separated. The walls are lined with display frames.

Inside the doors at the end of the lobby a curtain is hung to prevent the light, which comes in when the doors are swung open, affecting the clearness of the picture.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 600, with 150 of these in the balcony, which were supplied by the American Seating Company. Seats and backs are finished in an olive green imitation leather. The balcony seats are reached by two stairs, placed at either side of the lobby. It is divided into two parts, the front being given over to boxes, of which there are ten, each having four movable chair seats, on two levels. Back of the cross aisle connecting the two stairs are the balcony seats.

General Color Scheme Is Gilt and Old Rose

The design of the interior is most successful and artistic, in proportions, color and lighting. The side walls are divided into five bays with pilasters marked off with marble veining. Above these in a deep frieze are elliptical windows, centering over each bay. Colored glass is set in each, behind which lights are placed. This gives a subdued color to the interior and avoids the disagreeableness of direct light.

PLAN OF BALCONY

The general color scheme is gilt and old rose with the olive green of the seats giving the contrast.

Between these pilasters are large panels, framed by gilt mouldings, and painted with a stenciled pattern of old rose and green. The wainscot is plaster painted in marble veining.

In addition to the elliptical windows, the light in the house during the performance comes from the wall brackets, which have old rose shades. The four ceiling chandeliers are not used except when the pictures are not given. The wax dimmers in the house are controlled from the projection booth.

A most original and successful arrangement in this theatre is a large removable skylight about 25 feet by 35 feet in the ceiling. It is set between the beams supporting the roof. In winter it affords a means of ventilation, and during the summer in fair weather it is completely opened, leaving this large section open to the sky. This gives a delightful open air effect in the theatre.

The heating of the theatre is done by a steam boiler, made by the Ideal Heating Company, which heats a large section of coils. Over these the cold air is drawn in through a duct taken to the front several feet above the street level. The heated air is then sent to the distributors which are placed under the seats, in the lobby and other necessary places. A 10-foot electric fan placed in the ceiling draws the air off through grilles, some of which are cleverly worked into the design of the interior. Hot water is supplied to the toilet rooms.

The projection booth is well placed so as not to form an ugly obstruction in the interior and sufficiently high up to avoid the danger of shadows being thrown on the screen. It is reached by an iron ladder at the rear of the balcony. The booth is divided into two rooms. One is a rewinding room and the other is for the machines. Fireproof walls and doors give plenty of protection from fire. Two large registers in the ceiling afford good ventilation. Two Simplex Feaster rewinder machines are used with two Wotton motor generators. The length of throw is about 80 feet. The films are kept in patented metal boxes made for this purpose and manufactured by G. J. Gilmore.

The theatre is controlled by the Forty-fourth Street Amusement Company with Andrew Bolognino as manager. Four shows are given each day, with some new feature, using Triangle, Fox, Bluebird, Metro, World and V-L-S-E service. The admission price is ten cents straight for both matinee and night performances.

Taking everything into consideration the theatre is artistically and well planned, with all the best modern improvements, and is very well managed.—JAMES C. MCKENZIE, JR.

ALHAMBRA, CLEVELAND, WILL INCREASE SEATING CAPACITY TO TWO THOUSAND

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

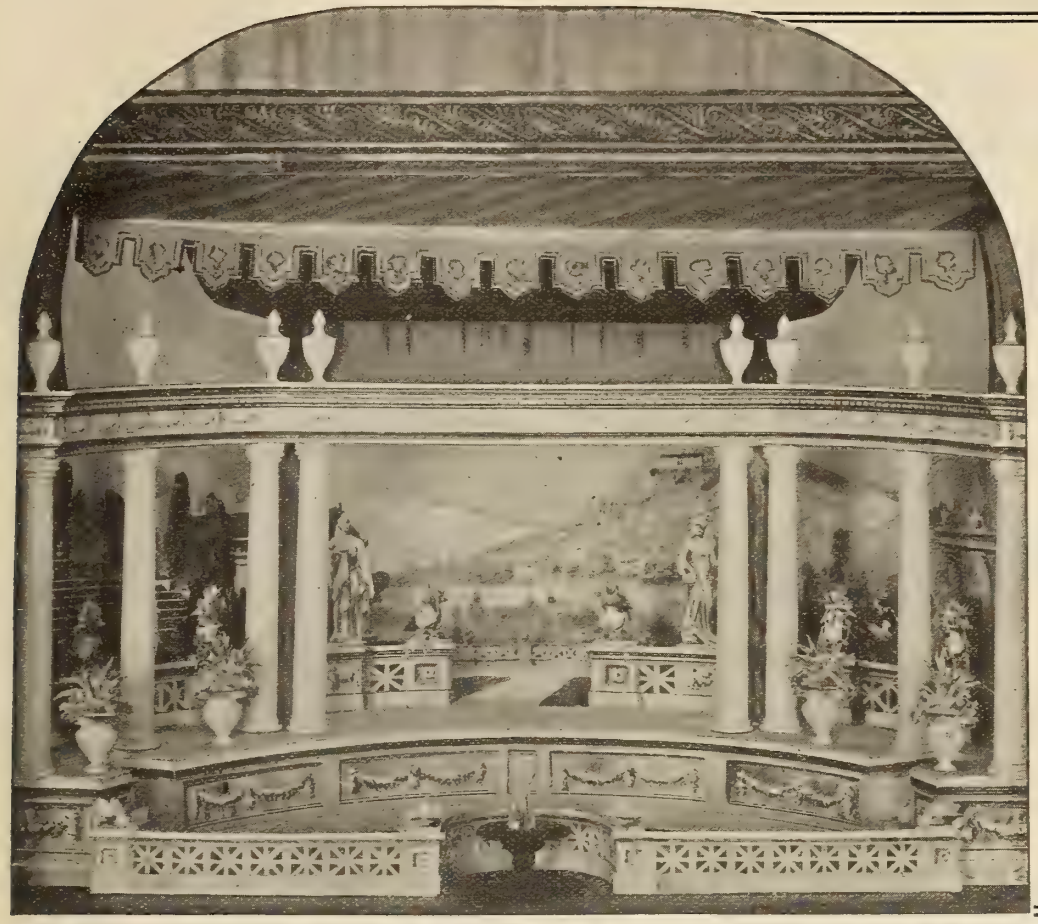
Cleveland, O., April 8.

THE owners of the Alhambra theatre, Cleveland, have accepted plans for remodeling the big Euclid avenue house to increase the accommodation from 1,400 to 2,000. The chief alteration will be the provision of a balcony providing at least 600 seats. Mark Greenbaum, one of the owners, states that this part of the reconstruction will be carried out without interfering with the regular business, but on the completion of this addition the house will be closed for other alterations and redecoration.

The scheme of the owners includes a rearrangement of seats to bring the Alhambra into line with the "hippodrome" houses now being built in most of the large cities of the country. There will be a special tier of auto boxes located next to the front railing of the balcony. These will be the best seats in the house. New stage settings and improved heating and ventilating systems are included in the arrangements.

The increase in the seating accommodation will make the Alhambra the largest photoplay house in the city. Five miles from the Public Square, the Alhambra is within a few yards of University Circle and is patronized by the residents of the most exclusive part of the city. While the booking policy is an open one, Metro, V-L-S-E and Bluebird supply the Alhambra with most of its features. The Alhambra is the oldest of the larger photoplay houses of Cleveland.

MILLION DOLLAR HIPPODROME IN UPTOWN SECTION OF TORONTO IS WILLIAMS' PLAN



Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Toronto, Ont., April 8.

ACCORDING to reliable advices received, it is stated that the Empire Amusement Company will erect a million dollar hippodrome in Toronto, at the corner of Terauley and College streets.

This is the first move that marks the gradual moving north of the amusement section in Toronto. The site of the new theatre is strictly up town, but well situated on car lines.

The size of the lot is 400 by 270 and the theatre will be of most pretentious proportions. H. H. Williams, a prominent real estate and broking capitalist, is at the head of the new venture, which promises well.

A STAGE setting possessing the beauty and originality of the one illustrated here cannot fail to attract the most desirable element of the community to your theatre. People will continue to patronize your house because such a setting adds to their enjoyment of the pictures.

PENNSYLVANIA ASKS TOWNS TO PASS ORDINANCE AGAINST CROWDING OF "STANDING-ROOM" SPACE

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 8.

EVERY city or borough of 1,000 population or more has been urged in a communication sent out by the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry to pass an ordinance which would impose a fine of $25 to $50, or imprisonment for 30 days, or both, upon managers of motion picture houses, theatres and opera houses for permitting conditions of over-crowding in the "standing-room" space at the rear of the theatres.

The ordinance requires that any person standing behind the last row of seats must be permitted to have at least three square feet of space and that in no event can the number of persons standing in a theatre exceed twenty per cent of the seating capacity of the main floor. The full text of the department's communication is as follows:

"Co-operation of every borough and city of more than 1,000 population in Pennsylvania is being requested by Commissioner John Price Jackson, of the Department of Labor and Industry, to prevent overcrowded lobbies and standing spaces in motion picture houses and the placing of signs and other obstructions in the entrances.

"Complaints have been made to the Labor Department against these conditions which would greatly increase danger in case of panic. Copies of a specimen ordinance are being sent to boroughs and cities all over the State which, if passed by the councilmanic bodies, will bring the dangerous conditions under local police control as co-operative with the Labor Department.

"The specimen ordinance, which is being sent out from the Division of Municipal Statistics, includes in its regulations theatres, opera houses and other buildings used for public assemblage in addition to motion picture houses. Penalties fixed in the ordinance vary from $25 for the first offence, to $50, or thirty days' imprisonment, or both, for the second offence.

"By the terms of the ordinance, every person standing behind the last row of seats would have at least three square feet of floor space and a five-foot passageway would always be maintained between the foyer wall and the standing space, and an independent exit would be available for such standing space.

"Notices would be posted setting forth the number of persons permitted to stand in the rear of the house and in no event would the number of persons standing be allowed to exceed twenty per cent of the seating capacity of the main floor. No person would be allowed to stand in any aisles except the regular employes, nor to stand in any of the exits.

"Easels or stands holding pictures or lithographs or obstructions of any kind could not be placed in the lobby or entrance corridor. Lithographs could be suspended from above or placed on the walls, but the lower edge of suspended lithographs would be seven feet above the floor.

"The ordinance makes the manager or person in charge responsible for the violation of any of the provisions, and when all seats or permissible standing space is occupied the sale of tickets must be stopped."

PALACE ON MARKET STREET, PHILADELPHIA, IS EQUIPPED WITH $8,000 AUSTIN ORGAN

THE Palace at 1214 Market street, Philadelphia, one of the leading theatres of the Stanley Company's chain of which Jay Mastbaum is manager, has completed improvements by the installation of an Austin concert organ costing $8,000. There are three organists at present alternating at the instrument, namely, Prof. Lancaster, a well-known New York musician; Richard Bache and William Hanson. The organ is a twenty-stop, two console affair. The swell organ includes Gedecht, violin diapason, viola d'orchestra, viola celeste, flute d'amour, human voice, oboe and tremolo effects. In the great organ there are diapason, nitsua, celeste, concert flute, major flute, four flutes orchestral oboe, tube and chimes. The organ is used sometimes alone and again to accompany the eight-piece orchestra under the leadership of Prof. David Kaplan. Selections from grand operas alternate with musical comedies and popular hits of the day, in the music played before each showing of the big feature.

BAN PUT ON 334 MOVIE HOUSES

Health Board Finds Only 77 Properly Ventilated.

March 27

The Department of Health announced to-day that 334 motion picture houses out of a total of 518 in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx were so improperly ventilated as to be a menace to the public health. The proprietors of these houses, economically employing bad air as far as possible in place of heat have stopped the fans, which most of them have installed and, by keeping the entrances and exits tightly closed, evade warming fresh air. The expelled air from an afternoon and evening of breathingfl creates a degree of warmth, and in many houses disinfectants are being used to disguise the smell of the air.

Only seventy-seven of the houses in the three boroughs were found to be ventilated properly. One hundred and seven were not in operation. The proprietors of the 334 remaining will be obliged to appear before License Commissioner Bell this week and explain why they also should not either ventilate or close.

The report of the Health Department is the result of a systematic investigation made March 18. This date was chosen because the weather was cold and the problem of getting fresh air correspondingly simpler. Previously Health Commissioner Emerson and License Commissioner Bell had visited several theatres together and reached the conclusion that every motion picture house in the city should be inspected by agents of the Department of Health the same night.

It was found that almost all the theatres had the facilities with which to comply with the law, but that they did not operate them on account of the cost.

Particularly unhealthful in the opinion of the Department, is the use of disinfectants to disguise the smell. This practice was discovered in many places.

The health code provides that every theatre is required to supply 500 cubic feet an hour to each person, and this necessitates artificial means for circulating the air. The code requires also that the temperature in theatres must be kept between 62 and 70 deg. The heating up to this temperature of air brought in through the wall fans therefore becomes requisite.

If these means are employed—as in seventy-seven of the places inspected—it is possible to keep the air both warm and fresh at the same time. The Department of Health and Bureau of Licenses desire that motion picture patrons shall cooperate with them by reporting any infringements of the code that come under their observation.

Authorities Investigated New York Theatres

Your Turn May Come Any Time

Investigations have been carried on recently in a great many towns to determine whether or not theatres are properly ventilated.

In many places ventilation is necessary to meet the requirements of the law. It will, however, do more for you than merely "get you by" as regards the law. It will make your theatre cool and comfortable and patronage will increase.

Modern audiences refuse to sit in hot, ill-ventilated theatres. Fresh air pays actual dividends and Sturtevant Fans will supply fresh air cheaper than any others.

Send us details of your theatre. Seating capacity, size, height, balcony, if any, location of doors and windows, and draw a rough floor plan if possible.

over little things—the time of thirty or forty men for fifteen minutes over the music for one hundred feet of film!

"Whispering Willow" had been selected for the Rocky Mountain scenic and it seemed very appropriate after Rothapfel had made the orchestra "put something in it."

In the educational, the "Study of the Bee," there was a fine illustration of musical sense when Rothapfel had the picolo take the part written for the flute—it put the sting right into the music.

The comedy evidently was to be of the "By heck!" character, as a few bars of "Reuben" were tried to be sure of the right swing.

Altogether there were twenty-seven musical units for the minor reels—a grand total of sixty-eight musical units for one performance—some attention to details, some hard fore-work, some rehearsing, some 'R-o-t-h-a-p-f-e-l!

The orchestra went home, but the soloists were still to be heard. One of these was a song of rather grewsome character—something about "Death!" It was sung with full stage lights. When it was finished Rothapfel with a shouted promise, "Watch me make it," reached the stage on a dead run from the orchestra.

As finally rendered with no lights except lightning, and framed intermittently with thunder and wind, it promised a big hit.

Strenuous Two Hours' Rehearsal

After two hours of Rothapfel's strenuous rehearsing I was as glad as the rest at his announcement "That's all!" and went home to rest. I suspect he had just warmed up to the point of enjoying the day, though I can readily imagine him back in his pleasant office working on other details which I might never suspect entered into the work of a successful director.

I am much like the average man—I go to motion picture theatres. Some I enjoy, others I tolerate. That morning with Rothapfel has broadened my horizon. If an entertainment pleases me or does not, I feel now as if I could more intelligently hunt for the reason.

It will be well worth the while of many a motion picture theatre manager to go to the Knickerbocker theatre and study from effect to cause just how Rothapfel does it. It will be a rare privilege if permission may be obtained to be present at one of his Sunday morning rehearsals.

Better still if one might start in with him Saturday night when he selects his film and follow through the actual selection of the musical program which precedes the rehearsal.

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY CONTROLS SLIDE RIGHTS TO WILLARD-MORAN FIGHT

THE Novelty Slide Company, which controls certain slide rights on the Willard-Moran championship contest, held Saturday night, March 25, at Madison Square Garden, New York City, reports that the territory on this unusually big event is going well.

The Novelty people succeeded in obtaining twenty excellent views, each of which is supplemented by a simple and short explanation.

Fourteen states were sold the first day the slides were released, and judging from the influx of inquiries, the remaining territory will soon be closed out to the highest bidders.

The Novelty Slide Company wished to warn all interested in these Willard-Moran slides to remember that the Novelty Company controls the exclusive slide rights on the twenty original photos referred to above.

A great National public utility

That concerns all merchants and all people.

THE original Cash Register rang a bell, indicated and recorded the amount of the purchase. It benefited the merchant only.

In a third of a century this old model has developed into a Cash Register that directly benefits every man, woman, and child who spends money in a store.

This new Cash Register equally concerns every merchant and clerk, every banker and wholesaler in this land.

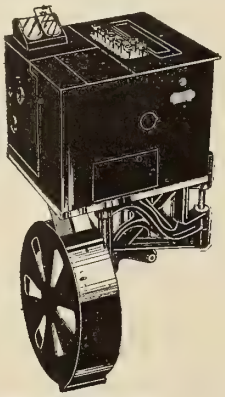
It furnishes every customer with a receipt or sales-slip with printed figures of the amount paid or charged. This also tells in print who made the sale, and the date.

It prevents disputes over charges and bills paid.

It saves shoppers' time.

It gives the merchant all his profits. It gives him more money for his family.

It promotes more and quicker sales.



It protects each clerk against making errors and against the mistakes of others.

It rewards the diligent clerk by telling his employer which one is making the most sales.

It assures the banker additional security for the money he loans the merchant.

It gives the wholesaler additional assurance that the merchant will have the money to pay his bills.

It will furnish the banker and the wholesaler mechanical evidence that the merchant's statement of sales is correct.

Merchants!

The above advertisement is one of a series that is being run in magazines and newspapers reaching sixty million readers a month.

Why do we do it? Simply to teach the public to help you to enforce a system in your store which will both increase sales and stop up leaks and losses.

And to secure for you the hearty co-operation of your banker and your wholesaler.

We are doing this to help you put more cash money in the bank every day.

New 1916 Models have a separate drawer for each clerk; give each credit for his day's work and make him responsible for every penny handled; give you detailed information on cash and charge sales, money received on account, and every other angle of every day's business, in detail and by totals.

DIRECTOR-GENERAL

NEW YORK CITY

April 15, 1916.

Second Letter.
TO EXHIBITORS:

I know that most every exhibitor is "from Missouri."

Last week I announced that henceforth my name would appear on no picture which I did not supervise personally. Now I am beseiged by hundreds of exhibitors who wish to see for themselves some of our new-day pictures.

Therefore, in order that every exhibitor may be his own judge, we now announce a national exhibition day for our new World-Pictures, Brady-Made - April 24.

You may see our new pictures at our expense.

We are certain that a demonstration of this sort will bring general applause - simply because no company has ever dared to show such unlimited confidence in its productions.

On April 24 you can say "Show Me", in everyone of our 24 Exchanges. You may see for yourself three of the new picture plays which bear my name. These screen dramas are:

"The Closed Road" with House Peters.
"The Feast of Life" with Clara Kimball Young.
"Her Maternal Right" with Kitty Gordon.

I am proud of these pictures. Please note the wonderful detail in the acting and the staging, which shows the craftsmanship of my associates, Maurice Tourneur, A. Cappallini and Robt. Thornby. But - judge for yourself. I know you will not underestimate the artistry of these three master directors.

Read our offer of a free trip on the next page. Remember that a few days after the private exhibition, there appears the double page advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post. Your patrons will want to see World Pictures.

If I were an exhibitor, I'd not be slow to take up a proposition like this - especially when we go as far as to pay expenses.

Yours truly

William A. Brady

Director-General.

National "Show Me" Day for Exhibitors on April 24 in 24 Cities

You May See the Next Three Brady-made Releases at the Expense of the World Film Corporation

Here is another performance—not a promise.

Here is a man-to-man way of proving that the new Brady-made pictures warrant your obtaining them for your theatre.

We are so utterly confident of the merit of our Brady-made pictures that we will stake our future with you on your judgment of our new releases.

Now you can see what you are going to get—weeks before. You have an opportunity to judge the new standard of World Pictures.

We will pay your expenses to the nearest exchange for the private exhibition on April 24.

This is absolute, wherever you are, with only one reservation, as follows: This offer is only to exhibitors not now booking World Pictures on a contract, and who, after seeing the pictures and being satisfied with them, sign a contract for World Pictures for one year.

This offer, you will admit, is perfectly fair,—for we cannot pay the travelling expenses of 20,000 exhibitors—some limit must be set.

We are adopting this well known merchandising idea, never before applied in this business. You recognize its soundness, of course. It means sampling before you buy.

We want to say nothing that sounds like a promise about our new Brady-made pictures. We want you to judge for yourself, calmly and without undue influence. But we are satisfied that if you merely see them, their merit will be apparent.

Arrange now with our nearest exchange for your free trip. Let nothing keep you away.

Thousands of progressive exhibitors on April 24 are going to be surprised and will then make a business move which will mean much profit to them. Do not leave yourself out and be sorry later.

Hundreds of Exhibitors Now Want World Pictures

New Day Policies Quickly Win Nation-wide Applause from Progressive Showmen

Now hundreds of exhibitors everywhere are clamoring for Brady-made pictures.

We find ourselves in the midst of a sensation.

Our announcements in the trade papers last week and our mail communications direct to exhibitors have heralded a new day.

Wm. A. Brady now personally directs all World Pictures. Two concerns—World and Equitable—have combined, thus uniting all their artistic and financial resources.

To remedy the evils of over-production and do away with a forced schedule of 104 productions a year, our schedule has been halved temporarily—so as to improve the product. There is time now for sincere workmanship.

Now great film favorites, leading directors and unlimited studio resources are all at the command of a master mind.

On May 6, appears the first two-page advertisement of World Pictures in the Saturday Evening Post, which will be read by millions of people—your patrons.

And you've just read of the "Show Me Day" for exhibitors.

All these definite things have given progressive exhibitors new confidence and new respect for World Pictures.

All these performances, instead of promises, impress exhibitors with the new earning power of the World Pictures.

During the past week, have you been visited by a World salesman—or have you been waiting? Please do not wait. This nation-wide interest has swamped our sales force.

So wire Mr. Brady or Mr. Shubert, or your nearest World Exchange. Do not run a risk.

A Swiftly Moving Story— A Great Company!

"The Secret of the Submarine" strikes the keynote of real Americanism—makes it heard around the world! The invention, barely achieved, is destroyed in a fierce undersea encounter. The United States and foreign governments—also a selfish millionaire—are in a hot contest for it. With the inventor's death, the sole records, hidden in an old library pass from hand to hand. The mad chase carries to Paris, London, Petrograd and back to U. S. soil. The inventor's daughter's "identity" is the "mystery within a mystery" that millions will strive to solve.

Juanita Hansen

The well balanced company is ideal as it draws with vivid contrasts, keen delineations the different strong characters. Thomas Chatterton, the popular leading man, is a striking figure, an intrepid actor who scores continuously. Opposite him, captivating, beautiful Juanita Hansen is the heroine ideal—with the daring and dash that thrills! The inventor, millionaire, his nephew and foreign representatives are all powerful parts powerfully played by Hugh Bennett, Lamar Johnstone, Joseph Beaudry, George Clancy, Hylda Hollis, Harry Edmondson, William Tedmarsh, George Webb—names well known to exhibitors and public—who will be remembered in years to come for their stellar work in "The Secret of the Submarine."

Taking the Guess Work Out of Exhibiting

"PROGRESS," someone has said, "is the result of discontent with old methods."

V. L. S. E. was started a year ago this month in the belief that there was a demand by exhibitors for a system of film distribution which would minimize the element of Chance and emphasize the element of Certainty.

There was instituted, therefore, a system of marketing films, designed to benefit the exhibitor in three ways:

1. By affording every exhibitor the opportunity to book those pictures which he deems best suited to his particular patronage.

2. By fixing each picture's rental price according to its box office value to the individual exhibitor showing it, thus insuring a profit to every exhibitor on every picture.

3. By offering every feature of each manufacturer absolutely on its own merits and independent of every feature of every other manufacturer, thereby stimulating the keenest possible competition, and encouraging a continuously consistent standard of quality.

These principles combined to form the "Open-Booking," "Box-Office-Value" system of renting pictures.

That this system has fulfilled a most pressing demand is evidenced, not alone by the unparalleled dollars-and-cents growth of this company during the first year of its history, but by the good will which it has been our happy privilege to have extended us by exhibitors everywhere.

It is this moral support, exceeding in volume our most sanguine expectations, which we proudly, but modestly, point to, on this, our first anniversary, as one of our most treasured assets.

And it is this same good will which holds a wealth of significance for every progressive exhibitor who has not yet learned for himself the source of its inspiration.

Prominent Seattle Exhibitor Tells Why He Shows V. L. S. E. Features Exclusively

JAMES Q. CLEMMER
Manager, Clemmer Theatre
Seattle, Wash.

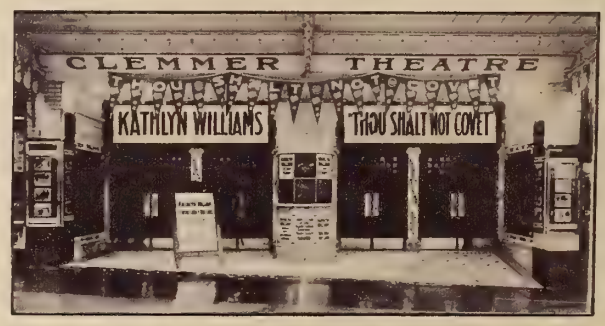
Just What the Public Wants

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I advise you of an entirely new policy which I have inaugurated and will pursue in the Clemmer Theatre; namely:



The exhibition of the famous V. L. S. E., Inc., features which I will run first run in Seattle, and for which arrangements have been completed whereby I can procure the two best features that are produced every week by the four companies mentioned above, thereby insuring my patrons of consistent photoplays of real merit and giving a change of program twice weekly.

V. L. S. E. features are just what the public wants. They are:

Pictures that you can send your boy and girl to see.
Pictures that you can talk over with your children.
Pictures that you can tell your friends about.
Pictures that are clean.
Pictures that are consistent.
Pictures that are wholesome.
Pictures that are refined.
Pictures that are refreshing.
Pictures that will stand the test of the most discriminating.

New Big Four attractions will be shown every Sunday and Wednesday. This will give you an excellent idea of the scope of the Big Four concern and also impress upon you the fact that I am sparing no expense to keep the Clemmer Theatre where it always has been, namely, the best motion picture theatre in Seattle.

JAMES Q. CLEMMER.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH

THE REASON WHY

A few days ago one of New York's most successful exhibitors walked into the V. L. S. E. office at 1600 Broadway. He told the clerk in the booking department to book him for the HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS REEL beginning immediately.

"I have been using a cheaper News Reel," he said, "but I have had to come to it. My patrons insist that HEARST-VITAGRAPH is two or three days ahead of all competitors. I am now convinced that it is true and I want to know why."

The man in the booking office knew his business.

"I can answer you in just one word of twelve letters," he said, "ORGANIZATION. The HEARST people have the greatest news gathering organization, and VITAGRAPH can turn out negative faster than any company in the world."

This is the experience of another exhibitor who now demands HEARST-VITAGRAPH and will take no other.

THIS LETTER MAKES HISTORY

This letter marks an epoch in motion pictures · It is the most revolutionary move ever made in film history. It is of vital importance to every exhibitor. It marks the turning point in the industry

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST
NEW YORK

My dear Mr. MacManus:-

I am going into the moving picture business earnestly and seriously and extensively because I believe that motion pictures are the modern development of the publishing business.

I have newspapers, magazines, fashion publications, fiction publications. I have, naturally, all the material essential to these issues.

I have been publishing that material in text. I am now going to publish it in moving pictures.

There is no great departure from established conditions in this venture, there is merely an extension, a development and a wholly natural and necessary development of the enterprises I already have.

The newspaper business, the magazine business, the book publishing business and all such analogous activities consist of informing, interesting, educating, and entertaining the public.

The knowledge we have gained of public taste, of popular requirements in the publishing business, we will apply to the motion picture business.

The resources we have created, the organizations we have constructed, the connections we have established in our years of intercourse with the public and of service to the public, we will devote to further service to the public in this modern development of motion pictures.

I have an intense personal interest in this new development of our business in this opportunity of appealing to the public through the vivid and vital medium of motion pictures.

I shall give it my earnest personal attention. I believe that better pictures, greater pictures of finer quality and higher purpose can be produced than have ever yet been produced. We will strive strenuously to produce them. I hope and believe that we will meet with gratifying success.

Sincerely,

William Randolph Hearst

WRH/GR.

FIFTY MILLION PEOPLE PAY

"I shall give it my personal attention. I believe that better pictures of finer quality and higher purpose can be produced than have ever yet been produced. We will strive strenuously to produce them."

William Randolph Hearst

THIS in part is the fundamental idea of the International Film Service.

¶ It is the final coupling up between the exhibitor and the gigantic Hearst publications—the greatest publicity mediums of the world.

¶ The International Film Service represents the first real departure in the annals of film history.

¶ It is the first producing and distributing organization to give the exhibitor the consideration that he justly deserves—consideration and service—publicity and advertising.

¶ It is the first time that the exhibitor has been given the services of the gigantic Hearst publicity organs gratuitously.

¶ It is the first time that box office insurance has been guaranteed.

¶ It is the first time that the Hearst publications have used their enormous forces to pull people directly into your theatre.

¶ It is the first time that the leading newspapers of the world have been utilized for the benefit of the exhibitor.

¶ It is the first time that the power of the public press in all sections of the country has been directly applied to motion pictures.

¶ It is the first time that the purchasing power of twenty million people daily has been directly applied to your theatre.

"The knowledge we have gained of public taste, & popular requirements in the publishing business, we will apply to the motion picture business."

William Randolph Hearst

THE gigantic organization of the International Film Service has solved a problem for exhibitors.

¶ They have conceived a new plot—discovered a new idea in motion pictures, which is—

The Mysteries of Myra

¶ This feature series opens up an entirely new line of thought in motion pictures.

¶ It was conceived by the brain of Charles W. Goddard, the well known author of "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," etc., etc.

¶ Charles W. Goddard, in corroboration with Hereward Carrington, acknowledged as the greatest exponent of psychic phenomena, the distinguished authority on spiritualism, author of "Problems of Physical Research," created a story founded and based on the theory of psychics—a new theme—a new plot.

It features the distinguished stage star, HOWARD ESTABROOK, and the famous screen beauty, JEAN SOTHERN, both admirably supported by an enormous cast of photoplay stars.

It was produced by the Whartons, Inc.

Twenty Million People Daily

The MYSTERIES of MYRA

deals impressivly with the occult forces of Good and Evil.

SHOWS the puzzling phenomena of premonitions—prophetic dreams.

¶ Plays upon the visions and communications with the spirit world.

¶ It is founded on the efforts of modern science to penetrate the mysteries of our future life.

¶ Yet, with it all, there is an intensive love story, full of heart-throbbing interest, hatred, pathos, and intrigue, touching the heart-strings of your every emotion.

THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA is a constructive story. Every episosode is stronger than the last. Each builds up to a thundering, gigantic climax, and is backed up by a campaign in the leading publications of the world.

Twenty Million People Daily Will Read About the Mysteries of Myra

¶ A great part of these people live in your neighborhood. The concentrated effort of the biggest publications of the world, such as:

and hundreds of others, are devoting thousands of lines of space to this mysterious, psychological drama.

¶ This publicity is worth one million dollars to you. It is the complete coupling up of the Hearst newspapers and publications with the Hearst film organization. It means box office returns that are guaranteed before you book it.

We have not left a stone unturned.

¶ The poster campaign for THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA is the most impressive ever produced. It is the culmination of the expert's effort.

¶ Even without the million dollar campaign, reaching twenty million people daily, the posters and supplementary advertising on THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA will draw crowds to your theatre as a magnet draws a bar.

Wm. H. Thompson and Anna Lehr in Civilization's Child

For the week of April 23rd the TRIANGLE-Ince Picture—"Civilization's Child"—with Anna Lehr and William H. Thompson—is a play that is bound to penetrate right to the hearts of the most disinterested theatre-goer. It's a picture that vividly portrays conditions as they are in New York today, and is sure to awaken more than a spark of sympathy for the difficulties that beset the paths of the innocent and unwary in a great city like New York.

Don't you agree that your patrons would be interested in the story of the pretty little foreigner who came to this country after witnessing the massacre of her relatives in Kiev only to find that her uncle could not protect her from the persecution and torment of a rich boss politician of the lower east side? Just imagine what a man of this type could do to mar the happiness of such a girl. He made life one continuous struggle for existence.

Even after her marriage to another the persecution was not over, for the boss's daughter fell in love with the husband and she wanted him for her own. The poor little girl had to give up all and when she struggled and refused they sent her to jail, the victim of civilization.

WHAT was there left for the girl to do? Just one thing. To secure her revenge for the wreck of her life. And she did it in a way that gives one of the most thrilling moments in this fascinating TRIANGLE PLAY.

De Wolf Hopper in

"SUNSHINE DAD"

The TRIANGLE-Fine Arts Picture for the same week will be De Wolf Hopper in "Sunshine Dad," the first appearance of De Wolf Hopper before the camera. It required weeks of patient, nerve-racking effort to get the lion to do the things he had to do in this picture. He wasn't a lovable lion at all, and he hated bath-tubs.

When De Wolf Hopper and Fay Tincher appear in the scenes with the lion they were not acting. It was mighty serious business with them. When you have seen the wonderful mystery of the play and grasped its cleverness and tingling quality you'll begin to realize that it stands out as one of the big motion picture features of the year.

Here's What You're Looking For!

Every exhibitor has felt the dearth of short, snappy subjects with stars of the first magnitude featured.

This is what Essanay now is offering you—two and three act photoplays with select plots and its BEST actors in the leads.

It believes in short subjects; it uses just as much care in selecting and producing them as it does multiple reel features.

And it is making them better all the time.

BROADWAY THEATRE

BROADWAY AT 41ST STREET

NEW YORK CITY. April 12, 16,

V-L-S-E, Inc.,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I booked Charlie Chaplin in his screaming, roaring four part comedy, his burlesque on "Carmen" for one week at the Broadway Theatre, exclusive rights.

Instead of running this attraction at the Broadway, I should have rented Madison Square Garden, and then I do not think I would have been able to accommodate the throngs of people that gathered in and about the Broadway. By this I mean to say, the throngs that were turned away, not even able to purchase tickets or in any way gain admittance to the theatre.

The double force of employes at the Broadway were unable to handle the vast crowds, and when the New York City police were called, they were also helpless for some hours. The heavy copper doors in the lobby were simply torn off of their hinges by the rushing, pushing crowds. The line reached around the block to Seventh Avenue and down to the Metropolitan Opera House. More people reviewed this film than any attraction we have ever had in the house, On the opening day over nine thousand people paid admission, which more than paid for the rental of the film for the entire week. There have been other film successes along Broadway, but this we are confident smashes all previous records.

Trusting that the rest of your exhibitors will have the greatest and glorious success that I have had, I remain,

Yours very truly,

The Fat in the Fire

THE fat is in the fire. The threatened breach between the Board of Trade and the Exhibitors League of New York is wide open.

Two expositions will be held in New York City, one by the Exhibitors at Grand Central Palace, May 1-6; the other by the Board of Trade, May 6-13, at Madison Square Garden.

WE have tried sincerely, as others have, to bring about harmony, hoping, as others have, that the whole useless agitation would surely be amicably settled, and hesitating to add unnecessary publicity to an unnecessary affair.

But the spirit of Europe seems to be in the air. They are going to fight. They are going to do their best to kill two shows, the objects of which are to strengthen the industry within and to introduce to the public the progress and dignity of our art and industry. They are eager, it seems, to present to the outside world a silly spectacle of inability and disorganization. Let's to it!

SO we present now all the documents in the case, all the added and equally unfortunate developments that have just arisen. We present these to the exhibitors of the country with a pretty confident belief that they will weigh the evidence with a fresh impartiality, to which we recommend the wholesome additions of a little humor and plenty of plain horse sense.

This will close the matter, so far as this publication is concerned.

PERHAPS the writer's version of the affair will have some weight. It is an impartial statement of facts.

Two previous expositions have been held in New York, in 1913 and 1914. They were promoted and managed by exhibitors' organizations. The manufacturers paid liberally for space and sent their stars as attractions. The shows were successful, on the whole.

Politics spoiled the conventions; too few exhibitors attended; the manufacturers over-printed, etc.; and there was the usual dissatisfaction over various matters that always follow initial enterprises of this kind.

But the shows made money and this money was honestly expended in strengthening exhibitor organization and against outside oppression. The exhibitors worked hard and entirely without remuneration.

WITH 1915 came the Board of Trade. It seemed only natural that the Board of Trade, an organization of the industry, should told the industry's exposition.

But, as a matter of fact, so very busy was this new organization in getting a start and in tackling the more immediate and serious problem of censorship, that nothing was thought or said of a trade show until the return to New York of S. L. Rothapfel, exhibitor member of the directorate of the Board of Trade, from his speaking tour of the country.

MR. ROTHAPFEL made an enthusiastic appeal for a trade show. The industry needed it. It would be most valuable for the exhibitor. A fine, elevating, artistic exposition should be got up and, if possible, put on wheels and brought to the attention of every exhibitor in the country, acquainting him with the newest and best advancements in the art of making and showing motion pictures.

At this very meeting of the Board the suggestion was adopted and a national exposition was announced.

A little later the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met in Chicago and decided to hold its annual convention and exposition in that city, July 11-16.

AT this juncture a letter, thoroughly well-meant, we have every reason to believe, but containing a single paragraph possible of unfortunate construction, was sent to the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America by the executive secretary of the Board of Trade.

Undoubtedly a joint meeting would have laughed this misconception away in one minute, but most of us prefer to fight rather than reason; so the little incident grew big and at the State League Convention at Albany it burst forth into general hostility against the Board of Trade.

We denounced this action at Albany—and again we denounce it—for one reason alone, that no one present had the remotest knowledge of the Board of Trade, its purposes, and work.

BUT to return to the announcement by the Board of Trade of a trade show in New York.

Just here the Board of Trade made, in the writer's opinion, a serious error. Not one man alone was guilty of it, but every member of the executive committee was equally at fault. The writer takes his own blame, fully and a little more, in the matter.

The error was this. The Board of Trade should at the outset, have invited the co-operation and participation in its exposition, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America through the New York branch, it having been the custom of the League heretofore to give over the management of expositions to the local of the city selected.

THIS was neglected. But I want to say, once and for all, that it was neglect and nothing else.

It was not intention, but a lack of intention, a fault common and equally common, in this very busy industry.

I say this as one who has attended every meeting of the Board of Directors and Executive Committee of the Board of Trade, who has never seen the slightest evidence of anything but utter and equal fairness to every branch of the industry, a firm and sincere desire to be of equal service to each branch, and who is most enthusiastic over this organization and the good work it has done and will do.

WHEN a resolution came from the Board of Trade, offering 25 per cent of the net profits of the New York show to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and endorsing the Chicago exposition, it came too late.

It was regarded as a bribe.

President Herrington came on to New York, conferred with President Ochs and others and a demand was made for 50 per cent.

This was refused. A committee of the Board of Trade, with W. W. Irwin as chairman, and a committee of exhibitors met to talk harmony. The meeting unanimously agreed upon the proposition of 25 per cent to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 25 per cent to the Board of Trade and 50 per cent of the show profits to be held as a joint fund to be administered by committees of both organizations.

AND here I want to speak emphatically of the sincerity of the conferring exhibitors, of their desire for harmony, their wish to work enthusiastically for the greater success of a single exposition and the administration of its profits for the good of the industry.

They were wrong in assuming that this committee had power to act for the Board of Trade.

It did not. Chairman Irwin so stated, distinctly.

The committee did recommend the proposition to the Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors made a counter proposition, renewing the offer of 25 per cent, inviting the appointment of an exhibitors' committee to manage the show throughout and a further committee to work continuously with the executive committee of the Board of Trade to secure unity of action and effort in combating censorship and other evils.

THIS resolution, it seems to the writer, met fully the spirit of the joint fund proposition. He still believes so and has yet to hear anything to the contrary.

This offer was refused by President Herrington for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

There has been no conference over it.

We are moving, as always, with ultimatums, not conferences; with misunderstandings, not facts; with utter and inexcusable disorganization.

SO now the breach is open. The fight is on. Let's to it and hurt ourselves all we possibly can.

There is nothing sane or substantial to justify it all; there is no good to be gained, nothing save—we hope—a clearer understanding in the calmer, better days that may, that must follow.

WHAT do you think of it, Mr. Exhibitor at large—in the West, South, North and East—you who make up the country-wide backbone of this fine fifth industry?

A little sick and ashamed, don't you?

So do we. WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

Thanks!

TO the New York exhibitor who cancelled his subscription to Motion Picture News both by telephone and letter—so great was his anxiety to be sure that his cancellation was known—we return thanks.

HORACE GREELEY, who knew considerable about the publishing business, said that he never felt fully assured of his publishing success until he got cancellations from his subscribers. He hates lapses of subscriptions, but he welcomed cancellations, especially those accompanied by violent words. He knew then that his paper was being read; not only this, but also that those who sent in cancellations would continue to read it with a seriousness never before employed even if they had to steal copies to get it.

WE therefore feel inclined to brag over the incident. We now know of one ex-subscriber who has become a more devoted reader, who despite his cancellation will read this editorial with some pride and some venom, and who perhaps will call us up again to tell us his way of treating a man with whose honest opinion, openly expressed, he happens to disagree.

Metro Withdraws from Motion Picture Board of Trade

Officials of the Company Who Acted as Executives of the Organization and All the Branches of the Rowland Corporation Make Complete Severance with the Allied Body—Disagreement Between Board of Trade and the Exhibitors' League Over the National Exposition Assigned as the Cause of the Break

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has quit the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., and has withdrawn all its branch offices from membership. Metro was one of the charter members of the Board of Trade, and was represented in that body by its treasurer, Joseph W. Engel, who has been the board's treasurer since its organization, by President Richard A. Rowland, who was on the board's membership committee; and by Arthur James, who was chairman of the publication committee of the board and a member of the committee on arbitration.

Metro's action followed the turning down of the exhibitors' organization by the Board of Trade in the matter of the national exposition. Metro's contention was that the exhibitors as the founders of the New York annual exposition were entitled to share equally with the Board of Trade and that in the nature of unfair discrimination was against the best interests of the industry.

Metro's letters of withdrawal, which went forward to President J. Stuart Blackton of the Board of Trade on Friday was as follows:

J. Stuart Blackton,
President,
The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc.

Dear Sir:—Metro Pictures Corporation, together with all of its exchanges, hereby withdraws from membership in the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., the withdrawal to take effect forthwith. Metro's reason is that it has no desire for further official connections with a body whose recent proceedings Metro regards as against the best interests of the motion picture industry. Metro cites as a case in point, the endeavor on the part of the Board of Trade to take away from the exhibitors' organization without fair reason or excuse, the annual motion picture exposition and the Board's endeavor to dictate to the founders of that annnal institution how, if at all, the founders should participate in the management and the proceeds.

Metro believes that a "throttle the exhibitor" policy is unwise as well as unjust, and desires in its withdrawal to protest most earnestly against such a course.

Metro has considered the facts carefully and is satisfied that no course other than withdrawal is honorable to itself or fair to the exhibitors. It is hardly necessary to say that Metro deplores the conditions which have made this action necessary.

We have the honor to be,
Yours, very truly
METRO PICTURES CORPORATION,
Richard A. Rowland, President.

Will Support Exhibitors' Exposition

Metro at the same time made public its intention to give cordial support to the Third Annual Motion Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and gave the following reasons:

"Metro Pictures Corporation cordially endorses the Motion Picture Exhibitors League exposition because the annual trade show is a motion picture institution founded by the exhibitors' organization. The exhibitors offered to co-operate with the Board of Trade Show and to merge with it on the basis of equal sharing and this fair offer was declined.

"The exhibitors are entitled to an equal share in an institution which they fostered and developed and no individual or clique or group can stand in the way of fair play.

B. A. ROLFE

"Metro is out of harmony with any high handed attempt to treat the exhibitor like a step-child and it believes that such a course will destroy any possibility of co-operation between the exhibitors and the manufacturer in the great fight against censorship.

"Metro's resentment was crytsallized by the circular sent out by the Board of Trade's show managers in which it was asserted that the exhibitors would hold no exposition. This was dated about the time when the exhibitors had been led to believe their proposals were acceptable to the board and they had agreed to join the board's show. Later when they found they were not to be given a fair participation they returned to their own exposition plans. The circulars were sent out after the Board of Trade managers knew these facts and Metro regarded these tactics as highly unfair.

"Therefore, Metro will not participate in the Madison Square Garden Show either on Fashion Day, Bankers' Day, Fire Insurance Day or any other day, and Metro will participate every day and with its best enthusiasm and material support in the Exhibitors' Third Annual Exposition at Grand Central Palace May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6."

Rolfe Will Direct Exhibit

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Third Annual Motion Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace, May 1 to 6, will be personally directed by B. A. Rolfe, manager of the Strand theatre. Mr. Rolfe sent his letter of acceptance to the exhibitors late on Friday, and immediately assumed charge as art governor, calling together the exhibitors' committee and show interests who had taken space at the exposition.

There will be six days and nights of carnival, with twelve brass bands for the week. There will be picture exhibitions day and night, with a ball every evening. There will be three motion picture studios actually in operation in the Palace every day and evening of the exposition, and the public will have an opportunity to see stars appearing before the camera in scenes which will subsequently appear in motion picture theatres throughout the country.

There will be a grand prize scenario contest, the details of which will be announced on Monday, and special prizes for amateurs have been arranged. There will be exhibits of picture machines, theatre equipment, lighting systems, seating systems and a history of motion pictures by a living panorama with actors, directors and picture makers appearing in the cast.

The Screen Club will participate, and will have a special celebration under its own direction.

Show days have been arranged as follows:

May 1, Monday, Jewish Day.
May 2, Tuesday, Allies Day for the Red Cross Societies of England, France, Russia, Serbia and Italy.
May 3, Wednesday, German Day, for the Red Cross of Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey.
May 4, Thursday, Orphans' Day, for the charitable institutions throughout Greater New York.
May 5, Friday, Metro Day and Frolic Night, greatest stars of the screen and greatest stars of Broadway participating.
May 6, Saturday, Actors' Fund Day.

The exhibitors from all over Greater New York kept the wires busy at the league headquarters sending in assurances of their enthusiastic co-operation toward making the affair successful.

It is officially announced that there will be special exhibitors' delegates from Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Chicago and intervening points.

Buffalo, N. Y., April 15.

The Overland Film Producing Company of Buffalo, N. Y., was incorporated a few months ago, and is working on a six-reel production. This company has a large studio in Buffalo and is erecting one in Detroit, Mich. It is negotiating with C. M. Thomas Real Estate Company of Rochester, N. Y., to build a studio in that city.

Plans for the near future are to build a chain of twelve studios in as many different cities, so that one big feature can be released each week for distribution on the state rights plan.

The Overland Film Producing Company is managed by James Calnay, who is also the promoter, chief director, leading man and the author of its features. He is known as a film expert and although only two years in this country he adheres strictly to American ideas.

TRADE PRESS GUESTS OF WORLD AT SHAW PLAY

To prove their contention that the World Film Corporation is now presenting pictures played by actors as capable as any appearing in the spoken drama, the officers of that corporation entertained a number of the trade writers at a performance of "Captain Brassbound's Conversion" at the Playhouse, New York, last week. In this production Robert Warwick, one of the World-Equitable stars, plays Captain Brassbound, opposite Grace George.

Mr. Warwick has been devoting practically all his time of late to the pantomime of the studio. His performance of the Bernard Shaw play was, therefore, also taken as a demonstration of the fact that screen work does not necessarily impair the powers of an artist for the spoken stage.

Mr. Warwick gives a powerful and convincing portrayal of the unusual character of Captain Brassbound. If work for the screen has any tendency to alter or impair the methods of a stage artist, it is not perceptible in this case.

Simultaneous with his work at the Playhouse, Mr. Warwick is at work on a new picture to be released soon.

PRIVATE SHOWING OF "MYSTERIES OF MYRA" ON LOEW'S ROOF ON APRIL 19

The International Film Service will give a private showing at Loew's New York roof, on Wednesday morning, April 19 at 10:30. The first two episodes of "The Mysteries of Myra" together with the rest of the company's program will be exhibited for the trade in general.

"FROM MANGER TO CROSS" MAKES LENTEN RECORD

"From the Manger to the Cross," the perennial offering, is coming up to its usual record for Lenten bookings this year, though no special efforts in the way of advertising and other solicitations have been made in its behalf.

Herrington Explains M. P. E. L. Attitude

League President Gives History of Split with Board of Trade Over Proceeds of Exhibition Planned for Madison Square Garden in New York

"IT is due to every exhibitor as well as to every producer of motion pictures to be informed of the facts which have led up to the holding of two separate motion picture expositions in the city of New York," says Fred J. Herrington, president of the National League.

"After both the Exhibitors League of the State of New York and the Motion Picture Board of Trade had decided to hold an exposition, it was felt in many quarters that two expositions were bound to be in each other's way, and that neither could be successful. Thereupon as I believed in a spirit of conciliation, the two bodies entered into negotiations for adjustment and compromise.

"I had prepared a complete statement setting forth my position in the matter, siding with the exhibitors because I believed they were acting within their rights. At the request of the chairman of the executive committee of the Board of Trade I held up my statement. How he ever learned of the existence of my statement is not relevant here; suffice it to say that he urged me for the sake of harmony to withhold it.

"Later, at the invitation of several members of the executive committee of the Board of Trade, a committee of the exhibitors, accompanied by myself, went into conference with these members of the governing body of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; both committees were represented by counsel.

"The Board of Trade committee solemnly declared itself in favor of a proposition for holding one exposition under the joint control and the joint auspices of the Board of Trade and the Exhibitors League. They said that they were satisfied to deposit fifty per cent. of the net profits of the exposition in a joint account, subject to the joint order of both the Board and the Exhibitors. The remaining fifty per cent. was to be divided share and share alike between the League and the Board.

"All the members of the executive committee of the Board of Trade present at this conference were enthusiastically in favor of the proposition, and our committee understood them to say that the final endorsement of the full Board was a mere formality.

"Relying upon these statements, the Exhibitors League decided to yield to the Board with but one proviso: that the management of the Grand Central Palace was to be satisfied with the arrangement. A week later the full executive committee of the Board met and repudiated the action of its committee. I offer no comment on this action; none is needed."

"SHOULD A BABY DIE?" WINS APPROVAL FROM BRONX AUDIENCE

"Should a Baby Die?" the five-reel screen drama written by Charles K. Harris, is being successfully exploited by Variety Films Corporation, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, according to reports from the company.

It was shown recently to a large audience at the Spooner theatre, in the Bronx, and won general approval. A novel feature in connection with the presentation of the picture is that spectators are asked to express their criticisms and submit synopses for a sequel to the subject.

"Board Seeks Harmony With Exhibitors"—Binder

"Organization Has No Controversy with Any Body of Organized Exhibitors Anywhere," Is Declaration of Executive Secretary—"On Contrary, Wherever Activities of Board Have Been Extended They Have Met with the Most Cordial Support and Co-operation from Exhibitors, Organized or Unorganized."

"THE Motion Picture Board of Trade," declares J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Board, "has no controversy with any body of organized exhibitors of motion pictures anywhere. On the contrary, wherever the activities of the Board have been extended, throughout the country, they have met with the most cordial support and co-operation from exhibitors, organized and unorganized. We have gone far, indeed, as an organization having at heart the welfare of the whole industry in which the exhibitor is a most important factor, to co-operate with them in practical ways.

"Certain allegations to the contrary having been made, in pursuance of the authority vested in me by a resolution of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade passed at the last regular meeting on April 6, the exact facts regarding the proposal to make a division of the net proceeds of the Trade Show to be held under the auspices of the Board of Trade in Madison Square Garden, May 6 to 14 inclusive with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, are herewith given. They are as follows:

"At the regular March meeting of the Executive Committee, held on the 16th, an application from the Committee having in charge the National Convention and proposed motion picture trade show in Chicago in July of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, was presented and approved by the committee.

"At this meeting, one of the members presented the request of the Exhibitors League for participation in the profits of the Board's Trade Show, and advocated the granting of the request. After discussion the following resolution was adopted:

WHEREAS, the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., has always desired and sought the co-operation of exhibitors throughout the country and feels that it is entitled to receive the unqualified support of this branch of the industry, and

WHEREAS, its declared policy is to promote the welfare of every branch of the industry and as an unmistakable indication of its sincerity of purpose in promoting the exhibitors' welfare as well as that of every other branch of the industry, the Board of Trade seek the co-operation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' league of America, and that said organization be earnestly requested to participate without expense to it, in the holding of the Trade Show of the Board of Trade in Madison Square Garden, to the end that the greatest possible success may be achieved by this exposition for the welfare of all branches of the industry, and that the Motion Picture Board of America, having confidence in the desire and willingness of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to co-operate with it on the basis herein suggested; therefore be it

RESOLVED, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall share in the net profits received by the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America from said Trade Show to the extent of twenty-five (25 per cent.) thereof.

Offer Transmitted to League Head

"This offer was transmitted to the president of the League, F. J. Herrington and by him, for the League, declined. A counter proposition was made by him to the chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade, asking that the League be given fifty per cent. of the net proceeds of the show in consideration of which he offered to allow the Board of Trade to share in the same manner and to the same extent in the League's Chicago show to be held in July. This offer was discussed at a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board on March 21. At this meeting a committee of four members of the Executive Committee was appointed to confer with a committee from the League on this subject.

"This committee met a committee of five from the League at the offices of the Board of Trade on the following afternoon, March 22. After an extended discussion the following proposition was formulated:

"1. The Trade Show to be conducted in the joint name of the Board of Trade and the League.

"2. Twenty-five per cent. of the net proceeds to be retained by the Board of Trade; 25 per cent. by the League, and 50 per cent. to be deposited in a joint account of six trustees, three from the League, and three from the Board of Trade, the fund to be disbursed on the joint order of the trustees and devoted exclusively to fighting censorship legislation.

"3. The Board of Trade and the League to have equal representation on all committees of the show and equal display in advertising their names.

"The Board of Trade committee agreed to recommend this proposal to the Board of Directors.

"The committee reported the new proposal as outlined above at a special meeting of the directors of the Board of Trade held on Thursday, March 23. There was a lengthy discussion. It was decided to adjourn the meeting for one week so that I, who was in Kansas addressing the joint meeting of the Kansas Amusement Association and the Exhibitors League, might be present.

"At the adjourned meeting of the Board of Directors held on March 30, the chairman of the committee appointed to meet the committee from the League reported the proposal as above stated and moved it be adopted; but the motion was lost. Thereupon a substitute resolution reading as follows was introduced and adopted:

WHEREAS, the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America have cordially co-operated with the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America in fighting censorship, and in solving other problems incident to the industry at large, and

WHEREAS, the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America desires to make due and proper recognition of this splendid co-operation, therefore be it

RESOLVED, that the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America hereby renews its offer to the National organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America to share with the latter organization the net profits that may accrue to the Board of Trade from the Trade Show to be held in Madison Square Garden, May 6 to 14, inclusive, on the following basis: Twenty-five per cent. of such net profits to be paid to the Treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America within sixty days after the close of the Trade Show without condition, other than that the money be used in extending the organization of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and in co-operating with the Board of Trade in its fight against censorship whether Federal, State or Municipal.

RESOLVED, further, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be invited to appoint a committee of three to represent the national organization of the League in its relations with the Board of Trade, prior to, during the Trade Show, and until the money above described shall have been paid to the Treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America as hereinbefore provided. The name of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America shall be printed on all advertising matter relating to the trade show to be issued hereafter in as prominent a place and in as large type as are the names of the Motion Picture Board of Trade and Madison Square Garden.

RESOLVED, further, that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America be invited to appoint an additional permanent committee, which shall confer with the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America and thus secure unity of action of the two bodies in combating censorship and other legislative evils.

"This resolution I handed personally to President Herrintgon of the Exhibitors League on Sunday, April 2, at the mass meeting held in the Pitt theatre, Pittsburgh. To it was attached the following letter:

April 1, 1916.

My dear Mr. Herrington:

I take much and sincere pleasure in transmitting to you herewith copy of a resolution passed by the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America at their meeting on Thursday, March 30.

I firmly believe that your organization will accept the offer herewith made, in the broad spirit of fraternalism and sincere desire for co-operation between all branches of the Motion Picture industry in which it was passed and is tendered.

With kindest personal regards and best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) J. W. BINDER,
Executive Secretary.

To. Mr. Fred J. Herrington, President,
Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America,
Apollo Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Would Take Letter Under Advisement

"President Herrington told me that he would have to take the offer under advisement, and that he would communicate with the Board of Trade later. The following letter, dated April 3, is his communication:

Pittsburgh, Pa.,
April 3, 1916.

J. W. Binder, Executive Secretary,
Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Binder:

In reply to yours of April 1, handed personally by you on the 2nd inst. to Fred J. Herrington, president, with your resolution enclosed passed March 30, 1916, by the Executive Board of the M. P. B. of Trade of America, and pertaining to the M. P. B. of Trade show, we are very sorry to say that on reading and deliberating on the resolution at some length, we find that it diverges to a very large extent from the agreement reached at a conference of recent date in your city with, as we were advised at the time, an authorized representative body of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America; namely,

Walter W. Irwin, treasurer; S. L. Rothapfel; William A. Johnston, editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and William M. Seabury, General Counsel for the M. P. B. of Trade of America, who, we believe, has in his possession the notes of the above said conference.

Representing the M. P. E. L. of America, counsel for the organization, F. J. Herrington, president; Lee A. Ochs, New York State president; Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer, and Mr. Whitman; it would be entirely out of the question for us to give the resolution any consideration whatever, in its present condition.

Very truly yours,
JAMES DELVES,
National Secretary.

To this letter from the League, Mr. Binder replied as follows:

New York,
April 4, 1916.

My dear Mr. Delves:

I have your letter of April 3, acknowledging receipt of mine of April 1 to which was attached certified copy of a resolution passed by the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, March 30, 1916.

I take it from the wording of your letter that this proposition is declined by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. I regret this.

Very truly yours,
J. W. BINDER,
Executive Secretary.

To Mr. James Delves, National Secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, 201 Apollo Building, 238 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

TRADE SHOWINGS OF "ALSACE" ATTRACT EXHIBITORS

Gratifying response has greeted the announcement of the Authors Film Co., Inc., that it will conduct trade showings of "Alsace," the feature picture in which Mme. Rejane is starred, in all the principal cities. Many inquiries from exhibitors show that they appreciate the desire to give them first hand knowledge of the picture before they book it, and these have already resulted in advance bookings.

One letter received from an exhibitor says: "I would not object to sign a contract for 'Alsace' without first seeing it, Mme. Rejane's name alone makes it a strong attraction, but since you intend to show it, will you kindly advise me when and where."

Paragon Films Plans Larger Output for World

Among Pictures Decided Upon by the Company Are "The Mysteries of Paris," by Sue, Direction of Capellani, a Version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and "La Boheme"

THE Paragon Films Corporation, releasing on the World Film feature program, has made plans to enlarge its output. This was decided at a meeting of the executive board last week, when the directors unanimously voted for an elaboration of the program.

Paragon had contracted heretofore to furnish twenty-four feature pictures a year to the releasing company. The expansion plans call for added releases, more stars and for the production of at least ten pictures based on plays or books of world wide renown.

Among these will be Eugene Sue's drama, "The Mysteries of Paris." This will be done on a very large scale by Albert Capellani. Maurice Tourneur, chief Paragon director, will shortly start work on a companion production of equal popularity. Frank Crane is now at work on a picture said to be based on a subject as well known as "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Alice Brady will make her debut on the Paragon program in an adaptation of Murger's "La Bohème," to be called "The Bohemians."

The adaptation for this has already been made by Albert Capellani, who will also direct.

Other productions listed for future release are "The Closed Road," with House Peters; "The Call of Love," with Molly King; "Her Maternal Right," with Kitty Gordon; "The Velvet Paw," with House Peters and Gail Kane, and "The Feast of Life," with Clara Kimball Young.

Albert Lowe has been appointed acting business manager of the Paragon studio, assuming the duties of Henry Bayard, who has resigned.

The complete Paragon producing staff is: Frank Crane, Robert Thornby, Maurice Tourneur, Albert Capellani, Cameramen: Sol Polito, Edward Horn, John Van den Brook, Lucien Andriot.

Assistant directors: Edmund Mortimer, Harry Haskin, A. G. Honey, George Cowl, C. L. Brown, Albert Dorris, Warren G. Bellew.

JAMES L. McGEE IS GENERAL MANAGER FOR SELIG

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, April 15.

James L. McGee has been selected for the position of general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company interests in Los Angeles, and has returned from Chicago in order that he may take up the work at once.

Mr. McGee recently went to Chicago to serve as manager of the studio there during the making of "The Crisis," and look after business matters pertaining to this production while the company went to various locations described in the Churchill story. Mr. McGee has been with the Selig company for the past seven years serving as studio manager of the Edendale plant since the opening of the zoo.

V-L-S-E Books Show Practically No Bad Debt Loss

Less Than One-Fortieth of One Per Cent. Is Record for First Year — Figures Indicate Appreciation of Business Methods by Exhibitors—Open Booking Policy, Which Gives a Theatre Manager What He Wants When He Wants It and for as Long as He Wants It, Is Factor in Success of Producer and Picture Showman

IF there ever existed, in any quarter, any doubt as to the reliability and responsibility of the exhibitors of this country and Canada, such doubt must be dispelled by the record of the V-L-S-E, which has just closed the first year of its business.

This record shows that the bad debts of the Big Four amount to less than one-fortieth of 1 per cent.

This accomplishment assumes added force when viewed in the light that, contrary to the prevalent practice of insisting upon an iron-bound contract from the exhibitor, accompanied by a deposit covering service for a month or two in advance, the V-L-S-E requires no contracts nor any deposits.

It is most significant, also, when it is considered that statisticians claim that there is at least a million dollars of exhibitors' accounts annually charged off in the film industry.

Discussing this interesting record, as well as other phases of the organization's achievements, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, on the company's first anniversary, this week, said:

"The record of this organization in having on its books at the close of a large volume of business for the first year, less than one-fortieth of 1 per cent. in bad debts, is said to be unheard of in the film industry—in fact, it is believed to be unparalleled in any commercial enterprise.

Compliment to Exhibitors

"The compliment, however, is not so much due to this organization as it is to the exhibitors, for the figures prove that the exhibiting end of the film business is composed of men of as great a degree of substantiality and integrity as can be found in any other commercial line of equal numbers.

"The experience of this company shows that the exhibitor thoroughly appreciates business methods and wants to abide by them—in fact, seeks straightforward methods with which to conduct his business relations. We attribute one of the causes of the very substantial and constant growth of the business of the V-L-S-E to this appreciation and desire on the part of the exhibitor.

"We, in turn, believe that we are doing our part by running our business on our own money, rather than on that of our exhibitors.

"Upon the inception of this company it was recognized that it was not only commercially unsound, but absolutely unfair, to acquire several hundreds of thousands of exhibitors' money by forced deposits on contracts, and then to use the money in producing the film which is sold them.

"Moreover, it was the judgment of this company that it was not necessary to acquire that money as a protection against exhibitors' accounts. On the contrary, it was felt that the exhibitor was daily becoming a more substantial and efficient man of business and that if he was treated accordingly he would not be found wanting.

"It is, therefore, a pleasure to announce, not only that the judgment of the company was correct, but that the greatest majority of exhibitors are business men of dependability far above the average—a fact that is conclusively proven by the books of this organization.

"Although the V-L-S-E does not ask the exhibitor to assist in financing its operations, it does give an exhibitor an all-potent voice in those operations.

System Meets Exhibitor Needs

"I refer to the open booking policy by which an exhibitor can have what he wants, when he wants it, and for as long as he wants it; in other words, the system by which he is able to always choose a picture best suited to his neighborhood and his clientele, and to book it solely according to its merit, without being compelled to take several features of mediocre quality in order to secure one that he really wants and needs.

"Full appreciation of this policy is being evidenced to a greater extent every day. Exhibitors constantly report that they want a variety of pictures—that is, a variety of themes and stars—that their respective neighborhoods and clienteles have their dislikes and peculiarities, with which they, as the neighborhood exhibitor, are best acquainted. Where they are able to see the pictures screened, and book those best suited for their purpose, without having any other pictures tied to them, they are in a position to please their patrons almost invariably.

"Moreover, where manufacturers are producing a program which is sold by the contract system on the flat rate basis, the producer of an expensive picture or a picture of decided merit received no greater return than the maker of a picture costing only half as much or quite ordinary as to merit. Consequently, the incentive on the part of the producer to strain for greater merit, and to spend a small fortune, if necessary, to attain it, does not exist.

"In this company, each manufacturer is in the keenest kind of competition, for he receives only the proceeds of his own product. Under no circumstances is the picture of one manufacturer tied to the picture of any other manufacturer. Therefore, the weekly financial statement which each manufacturer receives is so strong an argument for endeavoring to make better and better pictures that no oratory or written word is ever necessary.

Box Office Value Rules Price

"But to make this policy of the utmost benefit it is likewise necessary to see to it that every picture is sold according to its box-office value—that is, according to its drawing power for the particular theatre booking it.

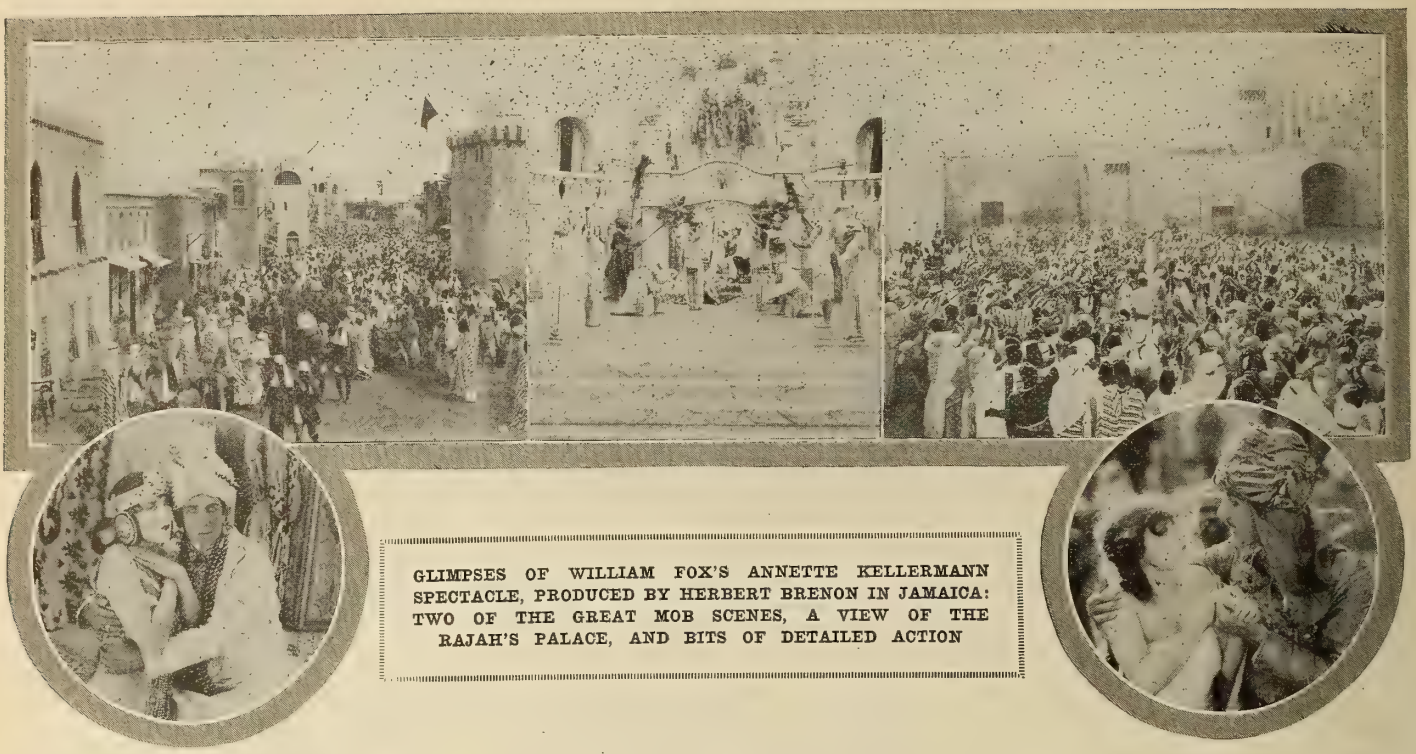
"This we do, and this is but simple commercial justice, for obviously it is an injustice to insist upon an exhibitor paying as much for a picture of ordinary quality as for one of extraordinary quality, and obviously all pictures cannot be of the same degree of merit. No product depending solely upon the human equation can be equal at all times.

"This policy of measuring our product solely by its merit has been applied to every branch of the Big Four's affairs. It has been its inexorable ruling in regard to all of its dealings, not only with the manufacturers and exhibitors, but with its employes as well.

"With between three and four hundred employes, the fact stands out that there have been only three resignations in a year's time, and very few dismissals, for the home office has preferred to err on the side of retaining an employe than in that of dismissing him.

"Permanency of organization means advancement from the ranks, and this policy has been strictly adhered to and proven of great value.

"Of the twenty-four offices conducted by this company, sixteen are managed by men advanced from the ranks of salesmen; six bookkeepers who showed the desire to learn, and whose branch managers had the good judgment to take them about at night and instruct them, have likewise been advanced to the ranks of the sales force. Ten shipping clerks have similarly been promoted. The assistant general manager was first a branch manager, then a division manager, and then brought to the home office.



"Salesmen work on a system that is an absolutely standardized gauge of each one's efficiency. Parenthetically, it might be said that this system also reacts to the advantage of the exhibitor in that it permits a salesman to give the exhibitor the type of individual, personal service that will "help him help himself" most effectively.

It Is Up to Salesman

"Such co-operation is predicated on the principle that a salesman's duty is only half performed when he has sold our goods to the exhibitor. The other half, equally as important, is to see to it that the exhibitor resells to his substantial advantage. In other words, a salesman on our force is not only held responsible for the volume of business he does, but for the degree of success attained by each exhibitor in his territory.

"Another policy which has had its influence in the growth of this company and in the calibre of its service to its exhibitors is the profit-sharing arrangement whereby everyone from the janitress up receives a substantial portion of the net profits of the company, as well as a salary, so that each is interested, not only in his own efficiency, but in the efficiency of everyone else.

"In other words, an exhibitor never finds it a trouble for anyone connected with this organization to do anything to further his interests. In this way we endeavor to make our sales occur automatically, by reason of the service rendered, so that exhibitors have learned, beyond peradventure of a doubt, that we are seriously and earnestly interested in their success.

"This interest, of course, is not altogether altruistic, for it follows that where exhibitors succeed because of our product and our service, that we have made of them lasting business friends, who, in turn, will become our best salesmen.

"So much of success in an organization depends upon its spirit, and, to some extent, at least, it must have been the spirit of the V-L-S-E which enabled it to go through the summer of 1915 with an increase in business instead of a decrease. The greater the handicap—that is, the greater the heat—the greater the sales force strove to produce results for the exhibitor, and thereby for the V-L-S-E.

Expects Greater Progress

"So, as successful as the past year has been, it is confidently expected that the next year will be one of even greater progress.

"This expectation is based on two facts:

"The first is that the four manufacturers making up this company are working harmoniously with the V-L-S-E, and because of their competition, each with the others, they are bending every effort to produce greater and greater pictures, with the result that, from the information possessed here, it would seem that we are to handle a very large number of great productions that will surpass anything so far attained.

"The second is that necessarily the first year, to some extent, has been devoted to developing and teaching, the work of which, of course, will not have to be duplicated in a permanent organization. On the contrary, it will be possible to give the time devoted to this preliminary work to increasing our individual and collective efficiency."

Carl Anderson Resigns from Paramount Pictures

Efficiency Expert and Advisory Official, Who Was Connected with the Organization Since Its Inception, Will Devote Attention to Waste Stoppage in Production End

CARL ANDERSON, efficiency expert and advisory official who has been actively connected with the Paramount Pictures Corporation since its inception, has resigned from that concern.

He will devote his time in the future to the systematizing of motion picture studios, believing that in that end of the business lies the greater need for organization.

Mr. Anderson has been associated with various picture enterprises for the past nineteen years. He is thoroughly acquainted with its every angle and is unusually well equipped to assume such a position in the film world as that in which he will shortly establish himself.

Immediately previous to his affiliation with Paramount, Mr. Anderson held a similar position with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company. He was partly responsible for the splendid organization of this company, and when Paramount was formed his services were enlisted.

The Paramount offices at 485 Fifth avenue, New York City, were planned by Mr. Anderson.

"In leaving Paramount," said Mr. Anderson to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "I leave behind me none but friends. The work of putting this company on an efficiency basis is done, and I believe there is a greater field for my profession in the production end. We all know that there is needless waste in the picture studio, but to date no man has offered an efficiency working basis applicable to every studio. I will endeavor to do so."

Mr. Anderson would make no definite statement as to his future connections, but said that before long he would probably be in a position to make an announcement.

Two Thanhouser Classics Ready for Mutual Release

"The Fugitive" and "Woman, Saint and Devil," by Lonergan and Directed by Sullivan, Feature Florence La Badie, Who Will Appear in Six More in the Series

EDWIN THANHOUSER has completed plans by which Florence La Badie will be presented in eight features a year to be known as Thanhouser Classics. These will be along lines never before attempted by Mr. Thanhouser, it is announced, and will be provided with unique advertising matter to accompany their release through Mutual.

Two of these productions are now ready, "The Fugitive" and "Woman, Saint and Devil."

Both plays are from the pen of Philip Lonergan, and were directed by Frederick Sullivan.

The main supporting roles in each are interpreted by Ethyle Cook and Hector Dion. Director Sullivan, it is announced, relied for the strong dramatic effects in each production on individual work of the players, rather than upon ensemble manipulation.

Besides being particularly adapted to Miss La Badie's talents, these productions will present new treatment as to plots, it is said, and will offer new departures in dramatic creation.

"Woman, Saint and Devil," for example, deals not only with dual personality, but also a quadruple mental state. Added to this condition are outside influences which conflict with one another in the principal's subconsciousness, causing her to commit acts attributable to diverse personalities.

"Exhibitor Co-operation Is Kalem Aim"—Wright

"Every Step Taken to Help the Exhibitor Which Is Successful Must in End Help the Manufacturer," Is Declaration of Official—His Company Endeavors to Make "Aid" Mean "Help" Instead of "Profit"—Charging All the Freight Will Bear Is Unwise Policy

"IT is strange that the question of publicity aids furnished an exhibitor to help him secure the best results with his pictures, is not given more attention by film men and writers on trade topics," declares William Wright, of the Kalem Company, in an exclusive interview granted to MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week.

"In all other walks of business it is one of the most pertinent topics of the hour. Glance at any one of the representative advertising journals, for example. You will find almost fifty per cent. of their articles treating of the subject of 'dealer co-operation.' Dealer aids of all kinds, from window displays to house to house canvassing, seem to be the primary concern of the sales and advertising managers in all lines.

"I'll wager, too, that you will find picture trade journals and producers devoting the same attention to this important matter in the coming months. At the present time 'dealer aid' as applied to motion pictures suffers from two great faults. On the one hand it has settled into a rut—each feature carries its standard aids, such as heralds, slides, and so on, all ground out in a mechanical manner. On the other hand, there is too much of the policy of 'charging as much as the freight will bear' for such aids as are supplied.

"Contrast this with the spirit you will find in almost any other line of business you may name, even some that are almost monopolies. Of course, there are basic differences between these lines and the picture business—but it is the spirit of help that is lacking, even where it is possible for the picture man to do as much for his 'dealers' as the cereal manufacturer does for the grocer.

Exhibitors Awake to Situation

"That exhibitors are awake to the need of 'getting out of the rut' may be proven by just one letter I have here before me. It is from Walter Murphy, of the Star Theatre, Two Harbors, Minn. He encloses a two-page Sis Hopkins slate insert which we ran in the NEWS some time ago. 'What is the best price you can make me for 3,000 Sis Hopkins advertisements like the enclosed sample?' the letter reads. 'This kind of stuff is what we need to pass around town. It is better than ordinary heralds. All companies make heralds and the patrons get sick of reading them, but this is something different, and that is what the exhibitor wants.'

"As to the well established practice of charging 'all the freight will bear' no evidence is needed on that point. But I can tell you what results an effort in the opposite direction will bring. From the days when Kalem was the first film company to supply exhibitors with newspaper cuts and to make an extended effort towards daily newspaper publicity, we have always sought to make 'aid' mean 'help' and not 'profit.'

"But in connection with 'The Social Pirates,' our current series, we found an opportunity to put this into practice on a large scale. As a result I feel certain that the amount of publicity aids that has gone out from this office on the series is unprecedented.

Extent of Advertising

"Take a one-sheet, four color-stock lithograph—with a 'Here To-Day' caption—for example. Instead of paying the usual price or even cost price exhibitors secured these one-sheets free in any quantity desired. Consequently over seventy thousand of these posters are now at work advertising the series—a bit better than the few thousand that would have been out had a profit been sought by selling them. Then there is the twenty-four sheet. We billed all the principal cities of the country ourselves, but the exhibitor in the medium sized city and small town found that instead of paying the usual per-sheet price, should he wish to show his enterprise by placing stands of such large size he could get them absolutely free.

"Only that I fear this will become a purely Kalem talk instead of the discussion on a timely trade topic that I set out to make it, I might give you further information concerning the various free aids—like slides—and the helps supplied at a price that stood us an actual loss on every sale. Such are the lobby cut-outs, buttons, heralds and banners. Three-quarters of a million 'teaser' post-cards is an example of the way exhibitors grab something new that is also cheap.

"But what I wish to do is to open the subject for discussion which will prove valuable to both exhibitors and producers. And there is the important point—every step made to help the exhibitor which is successful must in the end help the manufacturer.

"There is almost as much room for development in this one aspect of 'exhibitor co-operation' as in any other branch of the business of selling motion pictures."

Vivian Martin Signs for Morosco and Pallas Films

Star of Stage and Screen Will Leave New York on May 4 for Los Angeles Studios—Since Picture Debut in "Wishing Ring" She Gains Popularity Among Photoplay Patrons

VIVIAN MARTIN, star of the screen and stage, has just signed to appear under the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures brands and will leave New York for the Los Angeles studios of the company on May 4. She will begin work on her initial production for the Paramount Program immediately.

VIVIAN MARTIN

Since her motion picture debut in "The Wishing Ring" about a year and a half ago Miss Martin has gained popularity among patrons of the photoplay. Among other screen plays in which she has since appeared are "The Butterfly on the Wheel," "The Little Dutch Girl," "Old Dutch," "Arrival of Perpetua," "Little Miss Brown," "Little Mademoiselle" and "Over Night."

The theatrical career of Vivian Martin commenced at the age of six when Richard Mansfield selected her to play in his supporting cast in a small part. Later she appeared in more important roles with Sam Bernard in "The Belle of Bohemia," Andrew Mack for two seasons, William H. Crane in "Father and the Boys," and with Charles Warner in Drink."

In the title role and supported by an all-children cast, she appeared in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," for the Shuberts at the Casino, New York. Her more recent portrayals on the metropolitan stage include the star part of "Peter Pan," "The Spendthrift" with Fred Thompson; "Officer 666," "The Marriage Game" and "The High Cost of Loving."

In speaking of her new affiliation Miss Martin said: "I am indeed happy in the thought that I am now to appear under the Oliver Morosco and Pallas Pictures trade-marks because of the high quality in photoplays which they represent. I feel that I could have made no better affiliation than to be presented on the screen by these organizations."

Announcement has not as yet been made as to Miss Martin's first subject or whether the initial offering will be a Pallas or a Morosco production.

LUSK WILL JOIN WILLIAMSONS IN MONTE CARLO

Norbert Lusk, photoplaywright, has sailed for Europe and will go direct to Monte Carlo, where he will join C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the English authors, and, through arrangements made by the Amalgamated Photo Play Service, Inc., the trio will collaborate on a big serial photoplay and a number of other features.

Recently the Amalgamated Service persuaded the trio to prepare more of their plays. It was impossible for the Williamsons to come to this country, so Lusk strapped his typewriter on his back and sailed for Monte Carlo. He will return as soon as the plays are completed. Lusk will utilize his time on shipboard in completing some scenarios of his own.

Lusk for over three years was with Lubin as a technical photoplay expert. He also contributed original scripts and made adaptations, not only for Lubin, but other producers as well. For several months he was with the Universal, doing a variety of scenario work, ranging from collaboration with C. N. and A. M. Williamson on the synopsis of the Universal-McClure series, "Lord John's Journal," to the adaptations of Wallace Irwin's feature, "Thrown to the Lions," for Mary Fuller. After leaving the Universal Lusk devoted his time to free-lancing.

Anna Nilsson Entered Picture Ranks by Accident

Star in "Who's Guilty?" from Arrow for Pathe Release, Was Fashion Model and Visiting Alice Joyce at Studio When She Came to Notice of Kalem Director

ANNA NILSSON, co-starred with Tom Moore in "Who's Guilty?" the fourteen two-reel series of photo-novels which the Arrow Film Corporation is producing for release through the Pathe exchanges, was born in Helsingfors, Sweden, just twenty-four years ago. She has been on the stage and in motion pictures in the United States for the last nine years, yet she does not come of theatrical folks. In fact, Miss Nilsson is the first member of her family to go on the stage.

It is largely an accident—though a very lucky accident—that Miss Nilsson is today one of the real screen stars of America. That accident was caused by the triumph of curiosity over caution. Back in Helsingfors Miss Nilsson, as a little girl, knew several families who in time emigrated to the United States. She kept up a constant correspondence with her young friends, and one day was overjoyed to learn that two of them were returning to their home city for a visit. When they got there they fired the imagination of Anna Nilsson with their tales of the land across the sea; when it came time to return they took with them the little girl, who saw in New York City the place for her youthful ambitions.

For a time all Miss Nilsson did in New York, as she tells it, was to wander around open-eyed and open-mouthed. Then she learned to keep her eyes open and her mouth shut, as she puts it, and her ears very alert. Quickly she learned the language. And then she met one of the leading fashion photographers of the metropolis, who was convinced that in Anna Nilsson, then but fifteen years old, was a charming subject for the camera. Also she could, in the vernacular, "wear clothes."

ANNA NILSSON

In a brief time Miss Nilsson had become the highest salaried fashion model in New York.

One day she dropped into the studios of the Kalem Company to visit Alice Joyce. While she was sitting in Miss Joyce's dressing room a director entered and—well, then and there Miss Nilsson became booked for a theatrical career. She worked in small parts for a time; parts so small, she says, that if the audience had winked at a certain point in the films they would have missed her entirely.

But by degrees she worked herself up and soon was playing ingenue roles and then ingenue leads.

For four and a half years Miss Nilsson remained with the Kalem Company, appearing in more than 250 pictures in that time. In the feature presentation of "Shenandoah" Miss Nilsson was starred for the first time; also, her work in that picture established her as one of America's premier screen actresses. Upon leaving the Kalem Company Anna Nilsson went to the Fox Company, where she played the lead in "Regeneration." With Kleine she was featured in "The Scarlet Road." Playing then opposite Robert Warwick, she appeared in 'To Him That Hath," one of the big dramatic roles of her career.

Chief among Miss Nilsson's pleasures are swimming and horseback riding.

Leads in "Secret of the Submarine" in Peril

JUANITA HANSEN, THOMAS CHATTERTON AND MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN "SUBMARINE" COMPANY, GUESTS OF OFFICERS AT SAN PEDRO NAVAL BASE

MEMBERS of "The Secret of the Submarine" cast have been called upon to perform numerous thrilling stunts for the filming of the new serial, according to reports from San Pedro, Cal., where the patriotic screen novel is being made by the American Film Company in co-operation with the Government.

Thomas Chatterton and Juanita Hansen, playing the leads, had to risk drowning, it is said, when the submarine in which they were taking scenes was allowed to fill with water. George Clancy, the Hook Barnacle of the story, staged a realistic fight with a shark under water, until he was "rescued" by Chatterton in the guise of Lieutenant Hope.

William Tedmarsh, as the Japanese spy, was assigned the task of escaping from a sinking submarine after the conning tower was submerged. The camera was set up in another boat, and the signal given. The submarine settled swiftly and Director George Sargent shouted to Tedmarsh to make his escape.

There was no movement aboard the submarine. Sargent called again, but there was no response. Just as the director and his assistants were beginning to believe an accident imminent, the trap in the submarine was thrown open and Tedmarsh appeared. Scores of rehearsals could not have timed it better.

Theatre Trouble Not Always Due to the Manager

Blame Often Rests on Shoulders of Manufacturer and Distributor, According to Experience of Vermont Man—Pictures Sometimes Sent in Bad Condition—Once He Had to Cut Out 15 Feet as One Side of Film Was Ripped Off—No Sprocket Holes in Seven-Foot Strip

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The article published below is from the pen of an exhibitor, and was directly inspired by the interview with General Manager Felix Feist of the World-Equitable published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of April 15. As a whole, the document is one of the most interesting and intelligent that has ever come from an exhibitor. A perusal of it will repay every producer of pictures and every distributor for the time spent, and we herewith commend it to their attention.

I WAS much interested in the article by Mr. Felix Feist in the current issue of the NEWS, expressing his opinion of conditions in the general theatre, causes therefor, and results in various matters. Possibly a small exhibitor may tell of some things that would benefit the big fellow who is furnishing the pictures. Last Monday we had a five-reel feature from a prominent company from which we were obliged to cut about fifteen feet because one side was ripped off.

One strip of about seven feet was absolutely devoid of sprocket holes on one side, and in various other parts they were missing for from a few inches to a foot. More than thirty patches either pulled apart while running through the machine, or while rewinding. And this was supposed to be a good feature, at the regular price for towns of this size—not junk.

Another concern, from which I have been getting two features a week, changed my bookings three times this week, after my initial advertising was out, booking seven different features to get two. And they did not send new advertising matter for the changed features.

One feature company which makes a big noise about its immense film-cleaning machine sends out reels from which enough oil could be wiped to run a projection machine for six months, and dirt enough to start a window garden.

Hands Cards to Patrons

In reference to the length of shows, recently I handed to patrons a card to ascertain just what they wanted for shows. Two or three times a week we run an eleven-reel show at fifteen and twenty cents; the other nights a six-reel show at ten cents. As these cards were redeemed at the ticket office for five cents each, a large percentage was returned. It was worth five cents apiece to find out what our patrons want. Many of them indicated several preferences, but taken as a whole the returns doped out this way: Long shows, sixty-one per cent.; two and three-reel dramas, forty per cent.; comedies, forty per cent.; mixed programs, sixteen per cent.; cartoons, twenty per cent.; tragedies, sixteen per cent.; six-reel shows, twenty-eight per cent.; news pictorials, twenty-eight per cent., and fifty-two per cent. of the cards were marked "Yes" to the query: "Do our shows generally please you?"

Suggestions for betterment were written on the backs of numerous cards, a majority asking for two or three long shows a week, and the other nights to be six-reel shows at ten cents. And the week has been rearranged in accordance with this straw vote, as nearly as possible.

It is a fact that we get in more people on the nights we run long shows at an advanced price, with an increase of some sixty-five per cent. in money.

The concluding advice of Mr. Feist: "Mr. Exhibitor, don't spend so much of your time in the box office," is one phrase with which I most cordially agree. I never knew of a big business which could not get pointers from a small one; nor a small business which could not be more successful if it followed in the footsteps of its bigger brother.

In a small theatre the manager should not only know what is going on in the projection room, but should be able—competent—to take his turn there in case of necessity. With this knowledge, he should make frequent visits to the booth, and when there find out what the operator needs to do better work—and get it. It's a mighty poor way to blame the operator for bad projection when he has not the material or supplies to do with; likewise to blame the operator when the exchanges are at fault.

No Child's Job for Small Town Manager

The small-town manager who looks after his business as he should has no child's job; he has twice the work of a city manager, because he must please a great majority of the people all the time, as his patronage comes from such a limited circle; while the city man plays to an ever-changing populace whose tastes are more varied. And we must be careful to give no off-color pictures, or lose many of our best patrons. It is to be hoped that producers will eliminate entirely these vampire pictures from their programs. There never was need for them—not even so much need as for the scarlet sisters themselves.

San Francisco Branch of League Is Reorganized

Many Matters Affecting Exhibitor Interests, Like Pay-in-Advance Plan Lately Put in Operation by Exchanges, Remind Theatre Managers of Co-operation Needs

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

San Francisco, April 15.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League of San Francisco has been formally reorganized and arrangements have been made to take over the offices formerly occupied by it in the Mechanics Bank Building. This organization fell by the wayside following the holding of the National Convention here last summer, but of late so many matters of prime importance to the trade have come up that there was a general request for the resumption of activities.

Just at present considerable attention is being paid to the pay-in-advance plan which film exchanges are attempting to place in effect for service. While some of the members favor this, expressing the belief that it will throttle undesirable competition, others do not, and the league will endeavor to work out some plan that will be acceptable to all interests. Its members are also taking an active part in the fight against the new censorship ordinance proposed for San Francisco, and someone is on hand at each meeting of the committee of the Board of Supervisors having the hearing of arguments pro and con in charge.

It is planned to admit to membership in the new organization any exhibitors in the San Francisco territory instead of confining them to the city proper, as in the past. The former by-laws have been adopted with but slight changes, and affiliation will be maintained with the National organization.

Motion Picture Board of Trade Issues Year Book

Volume Brought Out in Response to Demand for Handy Reference Work Descriptive of Its Activities—It Contains Charter and Minutes of Annual Meeting

IN RESPONSE to a general demand for a handy reference book descriptive of its activities, the Motion Picture Board of Trade has published a Year Book for 1916. In consequence of the haste with which it had to be prepared, no attempt at pretentiousness was made, but the book is neatly printed and bound in strong paper covers, and is thoroughly serviceable. Next year the Board of Trade expects to issue an elaborate volume.

The present Year Book contains complete information about the personnel and organization of the board. Names of officers, executive staff, directors and committees are given.

The charter is printed in full as are the by-laws, and the minutes of the annual meeting, the president's address, and the addresses by the executive secretary and the general counsel, as delivered at the annual meeting on January 10, 1916, are given. Then follows an alphabetical list of members, and a list of the membership by classifications.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "Motion Picture News," 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

"BETTER FILM PROGRAMS" AT CLEVELAND THEATRES UNDER AUSPICES OF WOMEN'S CLUBS

Special to Motion Picture News.

Cleveland, O., April 17.

AFTER all day sitting in the motion picture houses and exchanges placed at their disposal, members of the Civic Committee of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs fixed up the first of their "family" programs and made arrangements to inaugurate the experiment at the Marquis Theatre, Crawford road and Hough avenue.

The name chosen for the movement is "Better Film Programs." Each program will contain a wholesome and entertaining play, a comedy (not on the slapstick order), a farce and a travelog or news weekly. "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning" is the first feature chosen. It is hoped to have at least four programs running in neighborhood houses in different parts of the city.

The whole of the 15,000 members of the different clubs affiliated with the federation are to be invited by circular or otherwise to support the programs by attending personally and recommending them to their friends. Clubs are also to be asked to discuss the topic, "Is there a distinct type of moving picture drama?"

CHILDREN STAGE SCHOOL VERSION OF "BROKEN COIN"

A striking example of the manner in which modern films take hold of the youthful mind is found in the fact that a class of children in Toronto, acting purely from memory, staged a synopsis of the serial story, "The Broken Coin," on their school platform, under the supervision of their teacher.

These children, ranging in age from eight to twelve, and including both boys and girls, have been constant visitors at a neighborhood theatre, where they have been following for many weeks the adventures of the heroine in the great story.

Coming from the theatre and going to it, play nearly always centered on the various incidents in the film. Each character had its ardent imitators.

"SPOILERS" KEEPS UP WEEK RUNS

Apparently the amusement public of San Francisco cannot secure enough of "The Spoilers," for week runs are still in vogue in the outlying districts. The Republic Theatre has booked the film for a full week, and there are but few open dates left.

GIVES SPECIAL "TRAFFIC COP" PERFORMANCE

Walter H. Hildebrand, well-known Milwaukee theatrical man, was recently appointed manager of the Butterfly Theatre in that city by John R. Freuler, who controls the house. One of his first acts was to put over a special traffic cop performance of "The Traffic Cop" at the Butterfly.

All of the traffic cops, some three hundred in number, as well as their families, were invited to attend the presentation of this production.

At the same time, J. W. Martin, who is handling the publicity for the house, arranged a number of interviews with traffic cops on prominent corners, and these run with cuts of Howard Mitchell in the role of the mounted cop were used by a number of newspapers. At the same time a big banner bearing the legend, "Safety First, See the Traffic Cop," was used on the front of the theatre. The result was crowded houses.

CLEVER ADVERTISING OF "FLYING TORPEDO" IN MILWAUKEE

Two companies of National Guardsmen, with the co-operation of the leading National Guard officers and almost unlimited space is one of the Milwaukee papers that has been boasting the preparedness game, were but a few of the stunts that Manager Harry Graham of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, put over in advertising "The Flying Torpedo" at his theatre.

In addition to this he had his lobby and canopy decorated with American flags and cardboard flying torpedoes. Two National Guardsmen were on duty all day in uniform in front of the theatre, and their presence added a decided military atmosphere to the theatre. All of the press work was along the preparedness line and much space was secured, both editorially and otherwise.

FILM NOVELTY IN A MINNEAPOLIS THEATRE

Prosper Schwie, who was recently made manager of the Lyric theatre, Hennepin avenue and Seventh street, Minneapolis, after he had built up a thriving business in the Calhoun theatre, Hennepin avenue and Lake street, that the place had to be rebuilt, has worked up a film novelty for his patrons. Each week he has a song or vaudeville number between each of the shows. This act is filmed and thrown on the screen the following week just to keep the patrons in touch.

CANADIAN EXHIBITOR WINS FRIENDS BY MILITARY PUBLICITY STUNT

Manager John Hazza, of the Empress theatre, Edmondton, Alberta, recently brought to a successful conclusion a particular successful piece of publicity work, which not only advertised the house among a large class of people, but made many friends as well. Some time ago Mr. Hazza offered a large silver cup, known as the "Empress theatre cup," for a competition among the various companies of military battalions stationed in Edmonton, for proficiency in miniature target practice.

Considerable rivalry was aroused, and "B" company of the 51st Regiment was finally announced as the winner. On the day of the formal presentation of the cup, the company, commanded by Capt. Lee, marched to the theatre, headed by the battalion military band, and accompanied by the officer commanding, Lieut.-Col. Harwood.

Capt. Lee gave a little talk, and then the cup was presented to the winning company by the mayor of the city. Lieut-Col. Harwood, in a speech, congratulating the soldiers, took occasion to thank the Empress management for donating the cup, and said that the prize had undoubtedly materially raised the standard of efficiency in this branch among the troops. This, he pointed out, was a very important thing, and the thanks of the military authorities were due Manager Hazza for valuable assistance.

"RED CROSS NIGHT" EACH WEEK AT VICTORIA THEATRE

Manager Clifford Denham, of the Royal Victoria theatre, Victoria, B. C., who has agreed to set aside each Monday evening as a "Red Cross Night" at his house, held the first of these special entertainments last week, and a considerable amount was raised for the Victoria branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, thirty per cent. of the total receipts being turned over to this organization.

Victoria people contributed several musical selections and other specialties as additions to the regular picture program, and the band of the 5th Regiment paraded through the downtown streets with a banner advertising the show.

CHILDREN'S DAY INAUGURATED IN ALABAMA THEATRE

Special pictures for the children, an idea highly commended in recent articles in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, were inaugurated at the Plaza theatre, Montgomery, Ala., recently, and proved such an unexpected success that the permanency of this arrangement appears to be assured.

Manager Wilby is one of the livest wires in Alabama. In the present instance, he is working in conjunction with the Federation of Women's Clubs in an endeavor to provide special entertainment features for the little ones.

The children's pictures are projected on Saturday, from 9:30 o'clock to noon, and the program consists of one special feature film for the children, a travel scene and a cartoon comedy, all of which makes, according to Manager Wilby, an ideal appeal to the interest of the kiddies.

The first day of this new program brought out children in large numbers and many of their parents or older brothers and sisters accompanied them.

THE WEEK'S BEST LIVE WIRE STUNT

A publicity stunt which every exhibitor ought to know about, particularly exhibitors in the smaller cities, is set forth in Tom North's V-L-S-E Pals:—

Exhibitor M. B. Hake, of Arlington, Wash., before showing "The Battle Cry of Peace," went around to the different schools and made an address in every room—eighteen in all. This resulted in splendid business from the school children who were allowed a special reduction, and also resulted in bringing their elders to the theatre and creating a lot of talk all over town.

ADVERTISING A LOCAL ENTERPRISE IN THE PICTURE ITSELF

Showing "The Lost Bridegroom" at the Hipp, in Omaha, the other day, Manager Jake Schlank did some clever advertising. In the film are insert leaders for exclamations by the players, as there are in any picture.

"Give me another glass of Krug!" is one leader, fitting in with the picture. The Krug brewery is located in Omaha, and the beer is famous thereabouts. Naturally, everybody understood the advertising idea.

TWELVE ATTENDANTS FOR THEATRE OF 600 CAPACITY

Manager Saad, of the Napoleon Palace, Montreal, believes in ample attendants, and has no less than twelve in his theatre, which seats about 600 people. Two machines give steady service, and Mr. Saad uses Universal Service, with other features, greatly to his success.

A NOVEL ELECTRIC SIGN ON CLUNE'S BROADWAY THEATRE, LOS ANGELES

NOVEL NEWSPAPER STUNT FOR "BIRTH OF A NATION"

"The Birth of a Nation," playing an engagement at the Walker theatre, Winnipeg, received a great deal of publicity on a recent morning, when after advertising the stunt extensively, the Winnipeg Telegram released from the roof of its building one hundred toy balloons, each with a ticket to the Griffith spectacle attached.

An immense crowd gathered in the streets nearby and took part in the chase for the elusive tickets.

CALIFORNIAN MAKES HIS HOUSE A SOCIAL CENTER

W. C. Calvert, owner of a theatre at Lompoc, Cal., along the coast about one hundred and twenty-five miles north of Los Angeles, is making his theatre the social center. He has laid a hardwood floor and mornings and afternoons the place is used as a skating rink. A motion picture entertainment is given in the evening, and following this several nights each week a dance is held.

DECORATES HIS THEATRE IN SCOTCH FLAGS FOR "PEGGY"

BRIEF HINTS FOR BUSY EXHIBITORS

Have you ever tried giving your patrons real biographies of photoplay actors and actresses? Not bunk, but facts?

Did you ever consider making these biographies a feature of your house organ? This is what the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, has done. Two recent issues of its house organ devote a page each to this feature.

The biographies are reprinted from the Studio Directory Number of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, just as they appeared originally, with the addition of names of pictures released since the Studio Directory was published.

Do you know any better way to advertise in your house organ your players for the week? Have your printer set up the biographies in the style used in the Directory, because this is as effective and compact a style as you could find. Give your patrons a few of these each week.

ROTHACKER PLANS NEW YORK TRIP IN MAY

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, is planning to be in New York for a week around the time of the first National Motion Picture Exposition, May 6-13.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"ISLE OF LOVE", RELEASED ON MAY 15, INTRODUCES GERTRUDE McCOY AS GAUMONT STAR

THE first Gaumont picture for May will be a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, which will be released the first day of the month under the title of "The Quality of Faith." The month's second Masterpicture from the Gaumont studios will be "The Isle of Love," released May 15.

These five-reel features have been made at Jacksonville, Fla., where the Gaumont winter studios are located. May will see the various Gaumont stock companies move from their winter home to summer quarters at Flushing, N. Y., where the Gaumont laboratories are also located.

"The Quality of Faith" enlists as co-stars Alexander Gaden and Gertrude Robinson. This is their first appearance on the same screen since they played together in "As a Woman Sows." In the supporting company are Lucille Taft, John Reinhard, Henry W. Pemberton, Charles H. Travis, John Mackin and Alan Robinson.

"The Isle of Love" introduces Gertrude McCoy as a Gaumont star. She was for over five years an Edison player, and after a vacation this five-reel photoplay is a fitting vehicle for her return to the screen. "The Isle of Love," written by Paul M. Bryan, is a type of silent drama that is always popular. It deals with a light opera star who retires to a quiet fishing village to study a new role.

There she wins the love of a sea captain, but explains that she has merely been flirting to gather material for her new opera. Later the man saves her from a drunken clubman. She is cast ashore on a desert island with him, but it is only after many unusual experiences and trials that she comes to love him.

The weekly split-reel, now released each Wednesday, will continue to show the interesting places in the United States which are being filmed in the series entitled "See America First." The Gaumont company now has a cameraman devoting his entire time to this work. He is at present at work in the South. Interesting views of Charleston, S. C., will be followed later by scenes from other southern points of interest.

On the same reel with "See America First" is Harry Palmer's animated Kartoon Komics. He has placed two new and interesting characters on the screen in Nosey Ned and Estelle. They alternate week after week. The first release of the month will be May 3 when Estelle, who is a Senegambian personage, will personally appear in an episode of the series which has been christened "Escapades of Estelle."

A standard feature from the Gaumont Laboratories is The Mutual Weekly.

The newest one-reel release from the Gaumont Laboratories is to feature all phases of outdoor life under the title of "Reel Life." The aim is to release each week a single reel dealing with life out of doors, no matter in what form. The communal activities of ants, the birth of a butterfly, or the habits of alligators, will be filmed with the same care devoted to picturing Belgian cavalry or some other human activity.

GERTRUDE ROBINSON IN A SCENE FROM "THE QUALITY OF FAITH," GAUMONT-MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE

No announcement is yet being made of the photodramas to follow "The Isle of Love," Gaumont's May 15 release. However, several screen plays are now in work at Jacksonville. What will be the first of these to be released may not be known until all have been completed. All are modern society plays.

"RED WIDOW," WITH BARRYMORE, FROM PARAMOUNT SOON

Bombs to the right of him, bombs to the left of him, bombs in his pockets, bombs in his hat, bombs in his hands—bombs everywhere, but they are the least of John Barrymore's troubles in the forthcoming Famous Players production "The Red Widow," which will be released on the Paramount Program April 20.

"The Red Widow," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, was one of the biggest comedy successes of a few years ago. In addition to having John Barrymore in the stellar role of Cicero Hannibal Butts, the corset salesman, the film has three members of the original cast. They are Flora Zabelle, who again appears as Anna Varvara, John Hendricks and George E. Mack, who play the Baron and Popova, respectively. In addition the cast also includes Lillian Tucker, Eugene Redding and Millard Benson.

NEW FABLE CROP FOR ESSANAY FROM ADE'S SLANG PATCH

A new crop of fables in slang, just raised by George Ade on his farm in Indiana, the state where most of the humor comes from any way, is being picturized by Essanay.

"The Fable of the Preacher Who Flew His Kite, But Not Because He Wished to Do So" is the first of the new series.

The style of construction is to take these essays and with each sentence as a subtitle, illustrate its import. Mr. Ade has complimented President George K. Spoor of Essanay on the close attention to detail displayed in the visualizing of the fables. He praised the work of Thomas Comerford, Essanay's "old man of the screen," for his work in many of them. Mr. Comerford will be seen in the "Fable of the Preacher," the first of the new series, as mentioned above.

BARRYMORE AND GRACE VALENTINE IN "DORIAN'S DIVORCE," FROM METRO, ON MAY 1

Lionel Barrymore and Grace Valentine are starred in "Dorian's Divorce," a five-part feature produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., which will be released on the Metro program May 1. This production will serve to introduce Miss Valentine as a full fledged star on the Metro program. She has been featured in several previous Metro productions, including "Black Fear" and "The Blindness of Love."

Many of the most interesting scenes in "Dorian's Divorce" were made aboard the revenue cutter Woodbury, which Metro bought especially for this production. The company worked on board the vessel as she came down from her home port at Portland, Me., to a new berth in the Hudson River.

The supporting cast in "Dorian's Divorce" includes William Davidson, Edgar L. Davenport, Lindsay Hall, L. R. Wolheim and Buckley Starkey. The feature was written and directed by O. A. C. Lund.

MARY FULLER PICTURE LEADS WEEK OF 24TH FOR UNIVERSAL; A NESTOR COMEDY FOLLOWS

THE Universal program for the week of April 24 leads of with Mary Fuller in the five-reel Red Feather feature, "Thrown to the Lions," for which special posters will be issued, including two six sheets with four sheet streamers to be used for combination sixteen sheets or separately; together with two three sheets and two one sheets and an assortment of window cards.

"Thrown to the Lions" is followed by the Nestor release, "His Wooden Leg," a comedy with Billie Rhodes and Ray Gallagher. On Tuesday, April 25, the Gold Seal players, G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson will be seen in the two-reel society drama, "The Other Half," while on the same day the ex-stars, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will appear in the Rex comedy drama, "The Unexpected." The day's program closed with Billie Garwood in "Billie's War Brides," an Imp comedy.

An Interesting Program

On Wednesday, April 26, Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson, and little Zoe Bech will be featured in "Lonesome House," Big U drama. Billie Ritchie will cavort around on the same day in "Bill's Narrow Escape," an L-Ko two-reel comedy. Universal Animated Weekly, No. 17, closes the day with Jack Cohn's Mexican desert scenes of fighting below the Rio Grande.

On Thursday, April 27, Fred Church, Myrtle Gonzales and Val Paul appear in the Laemmle two-reel Southern drama, "Miss Blossom"; Francis Ford and the Ford family stage "Chicken Hearted Jim," a sea romance to be released under the Rex brand; and the first of Hy Mayer's "Travelaughs," entitled "Such is Life in China," will be presented to laugh-loving Universalites.

"Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied," a three-reel Imp drama, featuring Matt Moore and Jane Gail, takes premier position on the program for April 28, Friday. "The Newlywed's Mixup" tops off the day with Eddie Lyons and Betty Compson, the Nestor comedians, leading the fun fete.

Flood and forest fire scenes will be seen in "The Torrent of Vengeance," a Bison two-reel flood drama, featuring Lee Hill and Ora Carew, which will be released on April 29. On the same day the Powers comedy, "A Family Affair," and the Joker comedy, "The Jitney Driver's Romance," with William Franey and Gale Henry in the cast, will be released.

On Sunday, April 30, Ben Wilson with Dorothy Phillips will be seen in "Their Anniversary," a Rex comedy. On the same day Harry Benham and Edna Hunter will be presented in the Imp two-reel drama, "Through Flames to Love."

Just to top the week's program off the Universal throws in the twentieth episode of "Graft," in which Richard Stanton, Jane Novak and Glen White play the leading roles.

LLOYD BEGINS MOROSCO SUBJECT WITH MISS GOODRICH

Director Frank Lloyd has taken up the filming of the Morosco subject, starring Edna Goodrich. The title of this is "Maddlena," and will have scenes laid in Italy and America, Miss Goodrich taking the part of an artist's model.

This will be the last subject in which Forrest Stanley appears, as he has accepted an engagement with a San Francisco stock company, and will return to the legitimate stage. Other players selected to support Miss Goodrich are Juan de la Cruz, Mary Mersch and Howard Davies.

"HEART'S TRIBUTE," BY GOODMAN, FROM LUBIN ON 20th

"The Heart's Tribute," a three-act drama produced by the Lubin Company and released April 20 through the General Film Company, is by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, direction of Rene Plaissetty.

"THE SNOWBIRD," FROM METRO ON MAY 8, IS LAID IN HUDSON BAY DISTRICT

"THE SNOWBIRD," a five-part production in which Mabel Taliaferro is starred and Edwin Carewe, the director, is featured, now being produced by the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., will be released on the Metro Program May 8.

The story of "The Snowbird" is laid in the Hudson Bay District. John Wheeler, a traction magnate, becomes financially embarrassed and borrows money on a tract of timber land in the north, from Bruce Mitchell, a wealthy man about town. Mitchell is in love with Lois, Wheeler's daughter, but she does not return the love. When it is found that the deed Wheeler held to the land is missing, and that the only record of his ownership is a copy of the deed held by Jean Corteau, the unscrupulous son of Wheeler's late partner in the timber land, Mitchell threatens to have Wheeler arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. But he offers to let the matter drop if Lois will marry him.

Lois agrees, if she cannot prove her father innocent. Disguised as a boy, she goes to Jean's cabin, and falls exhausted at his door. He takes her in, and discovers the next day that she is a girl. She finds the deed she is seeking, and steals it. Just falls in love with her, and declares his willingness to save her father. When he discovers the deed is missing, however, he flies into a rage, but his love for Lois prompts him to forgive her.

Mitchell and Wheeler come North in search of Lois. Mitchell has Wheeler arrested, and going to Jean's cabin confronts Lois and accuses her of a liaison with Jean.

The two men fight, and both are wounded. Mitchell drags himself out of the cabin, and later falls to his death over a cliff. She takes the deed to the trading post, secures her father's release, and then returns to Jean. She nurses him back to health and they are married.

Carewe plays the part of Jean, and Miss Taliaferro is said to have exceptional opportunities in the role of Lois. The supporting cast includes James Cruze, Warren Cook, Walter Hitchcock, and Kitty Stevens.

"LAW DECIDES" FROM "V" ON 24TH; A BRUNO LESSING ONE-PART COMEDY ON 24TH

"THE LAW DECIDES" is the title of the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature to be released on April 24.

The story tells of the plotting of Mrs. Wharton to arrange a union between her daughter Beatrice and her stepson John, who is already married. John is very happy with his wife Florence and son Bobby. In Lorenz a former suitor of Florence, who is still in love with her, Mrs. Wharton finds a handy tool.

Through their plotting they succeed in making John believe that his wife loves Lorenz. He divorces her, and to protect her honor she marries Lorenz, but shows him no affection. Later John is about to marry Beatrice in order to please his stepmother, but learns of her part in his separation from his wife, and this halts the wedding. Lorenz, seeing that all is known, shows that he still has a spark of honor by ending his life, thus releasing Florence, who may now marry the man she has never ceased to love.

The story, told in seven parts, was written by Marguerite Bertsch and directed by William P. S. Earle, with the assistance of Miss Bertsch. Harry Morey and Dorothy Kelly in the leading parts are supported by Donald Hall, Bobby Connelly, Adele Kelly and Louise Beaudet.

The latest of the "Escapades of Mr. Jack" with Frank Daniels is "Mr. Jack Goes Into Business." This is a one-part comedy, written by Bruno Lessing and directed by C. Jay Williams. It is scheduled for release on April 24.

"The Rookie" is a single part drama produced by Harry Davenport, and is also listed for April 24. The story comes from the pen of Paul West. Evart Overton as the Rookie is assistd by Bobby Connelly and Ned Finley.

"Terry's Tea Party," a one-part comedy written by George McManus, the famous newspaper cartoonist, tells of the trouble father has in getting out to his cronies in the corner saloon. He finally manages to get there, and incidentally makes mother think him a hero. The cast includes John T. Kelly, Hughey Mack, Kate Price, Jewell Hunt and Doc Donohue. Lawrence Semon, who directed the production, also plays an important part. It will be released on April 28.

"The Man Hunt" is a three-part Broadway Star Feature drama. The theme deals with the Fourteenth Regiment, which leaves for the front at seven next morning, and whose captain has been missing for three days. His friend, the assistant secretary of war, finds him in a drunken condition. He has been tricked, and is being detained by enemies, who have discovered his weakness.

After many thrilling experiences he is returned to the head of his company and saved from further disgrace by the young secretary. James Morrison in the leading role is seen to good advantage. The balance of the cast includes Robert Gaillard, Billie Billings, Marguerite Blake, Emmanuel A. Turner and Raymond Walburn. Arthur C. Train is the author of the story, and Paul Scardon is responsible for its direction. It is on the General Film program for April 29.

FLORA ZABELLE, IN ORIGINAL STAGE CAST, WITH BARRYMORE IN ABBOTT PHOTODRAMA

JACK BARRYMORE, in a picturization of "The Red Widow," and Marguerite Clark in a film adaptation of Eleanor Hallowell Abbott's charming story, "Molly Make-Believe," are the two five-reel offerings on the Paramount Program for the week of April 17. Both are from the studio of the Famous Players.

In the screen version of the Pollock-Wolf comedy Barrymore has the support of several members of the cast in the original production. Flora Zabelle, co-star in the stage production, appears as Anna Varvara, and John Hendricks and George E. Mack are seen in the roles of the Baron and Popova, as they were in the original version.

A selected cast will appear in support of Miss Clark in "Molly Make-Believe," including J. W. Johnston, Edwin Mordant, Mahlon Hamilton, Gertrude Norman and others.

Henry Reuterdahl, naval expert, will start the naval series of the "Preparedness" films in the thirteenth release of the Paramount Pictographs, for the week of April 17. The inadequacy of the United States Navy will be shown. Also included in that week's features for the Pictographs will be "Better Babies," a political cartoon by J. R. Bray, "Things We Should know: How Submarines Go Down," and a new chapter in the "Hazards of Happifat."

"Through the Lowlands of Luzon with Burton Holmes," the twelfth release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Pictures, and "Colonel Heeza Liar Wins the Pennant," Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, will be the two other single reel releases on the Paramount program for the same week.

"GIRL WITH GREEN EYES" FROM PATHE ON MAY 16

Pathé announces the five-reel feature, "The Girl With the Green Eyes," adapted from the play of the same name written by Clyde Fitch. Katharine Kaelred and Julian L. Estrange, well-known players on the legitimate stage, are featured in this production. It is a forceful drama with the jealousy of a young married woman of her husband as the main theme.

The play will be put upon the Gold Rooster Program and released May 16.

"MILLIONAIRE BILLIE," ONE-ACT COMEDY FROM LUBIN

"Millionaire Billie" is a one-act comedy, produced by the Lubin Company and released April 22 through the General Film Company. Billie Reeves is featured in a story written and directed by Clay M. Greene, in which it is shown that money is a better blanket than even charity for the covering of a multitude of sins.

"A LUNCH ROOM LEGACY" FROM KALEM, MAY 12

A single reel a week continues to be the output of Kalem "Sis Hopkins" comedies on the General Film program. Three of the forthcoming "Sis Hopkins" comedies announced are "A Lunch Room Legacy," "The Dumb Heiress" and "A Lucky Mistake."

"A Lunch Room Legacy" finds Sis inheriting a fashionable cabaret restaurant and reforming it according to her ideas of what a restaurant should be. This is released May 12.

Good luck is with Sis for "A Dumb Heiress," released May 5, also finds her inheriting a few thousand dollars. Fortune hunters make her life miserable when she arrives in the city, added to the fact that she is afraid to speak to any man since a fortune teller has told her that the first man she speaks to in the city will be her life's mate.

"A Lucky Mistake," issued April 28, finds Sis blundering along, but with all her mistakes succeeding in saving the day for a desperate stock broker, starting a romance and becoming the heroine of the household.

SUCCESSFUL HOYT FARCE FROM SELIG ON MAY 8

Th Selig multiple reel feature comedy, "A Stranger in New York," will be released through General Film Service on Monday, May 8. "A Stranger in New York" was one of the late Charles Hoyt's most successful farce comedies. The film version was made by Gilson Willets. Otis Harlan, the comedian, who achieved much success on the stage in "A Stranger in New York," enacts the leading role in the Selig comedy.

Mr. Harlan is supported by a company of players each selected with care for the type portrayed. In brief, the plot concerns A. Stranger, an itinerant book agent who, staked by I. Collier Downe, goes to New York, corners the prune juice market and cleans up a million.

"PASQUALE" NOW IN CUTTING ROOM

The Morosco-George Beban picture, "Pasquale," has been finished and is now in the process of being cut for the screen by Director William D. Taylor. Mr. Beban believes that this will be one of, if not his best, screen subject, and for that reason is remaining in Los Angeles that he may have the opportunity of seeing it as soon as completed. After this showing Mr. Beban will return to New York, where he has other engagements.

"SHOES" MAY BE A WALKOVER FOR "U" WHEN IT APPEARS

"Shoes" is the rather unusual title of a film play which is being produced by the Smalleys for Universal, with Mary McDonald playing the leading part. In the supporting cast are Mrs. Harry Davenport, Lena Baskette, the child dancer; William V. Mong and Harry Griffith.

The story was written by Stella N. Herron and adapted for the screen by Lois Weber.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

A PLAN has been devised by Charley Murray, Keystone comedian, for members of Mack Sennett's producing staff to give a monthly vaudeville program or present some drama or farce at a local theatre, the net proceeds from which are to go to a fund to be used to care for the sick or injured members of the staff.

In the past when any of the players were injured or taken ill, all about the studio have liberally contributed money to pay doctor, hospital anud living expenses. In most instances the misfortune falls on the extra people who are the least able to bear the loss.

Arrangements are now being made for the presentation of "Alma, Where Do You Live?" by Paul Herve and Adolph Phillips. The cast selected includes: Mae Emory, as Alma; Mae Bush, the French maid; Alice Davenport, wife of Theobold; Miss Therman, the niece; Ford Sterling, the count; James Donally, the priest; Joe Swickard, the notary; Bobbie Vernon, Pierre; Harry McCoy, Gaston, and Charles Murray, Theobold. This will probably be given within the next month.

"Alien Souls" has been selected as the title for the Lasky production featuring the Japanese players Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki. This subject is being filmed under the direction of Frank Reicher, from a scenario adapted from the Hector Turnbull story. The cast includes: Earle Foxe, Florence Smythe, Grace Benham, Isabelle Malone, Robert Grey and J. Parks Jones.

"Easy Money" from Lasky

Another new production taken up at the Lasky studio is entitled "Easy Money." The story and scenario for this was prepared by Margaret Turnbull and James Young, and the production is being made under the direction of the latter. Blanche Sweet will appear in the featured part of this, with a supporting cast which includes Camille Astor, Theodore Roberts, Horace B. Carpenter, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Raymond Hatton and Jane Wolfe. In this subject the leading woman, who for the past several subjects has appeared in ragamuffin parts with more or less dilapidated costumes, is to be seen in some advanced styles created especially for the part.

The last of a series of dinners given by the southern California Actors' Fund Committee, was that at the Maryland Hotel, Pasadena, Thursday evening April 6. At this, as at previous dinners, a large percentage of the gross receipts were turned over to the Actors' Fund. The attendance was good, and a program was given in which motion picture players participated, the list including Charley Murray, Theodore Roberts, DeWolf Hopper and others. Samuel Goldfish of New York, treasurer of the motion picture department of the fund, and Marc Klaw, chairman of the finance committee, and Harry Aitken were honored guests at this dinner.

W. A. Hurlburt, author of "The Fighting Hope" and other successful plays, recently engaged by the Lasky Company as scenario writer, has arrived at the studio and begun the preparation of his first story.

De Mille on Story for Mae Murray

Cecil B. DeMille is engaged in writing a story in which Mae Murray will be starred, and Director George Melford is busy with the production of an untitled photoplay by Willard Mack and Clinton H. Stagg. This is a story of the slums and the present day west, with Fannie Ward as its star.

Members of the Lasky stock company have induced the Japanese actor Sessue Hayakawa to give them instructions in Japanese fencing and jiu jitsu, and the little brownman has proven himself a sturdy warrior and competent exponent of the wrestling art as practiced in his native land. A number of the cowboys as well as the sturdy leading men have been convinced that strength is not to be compared with the scientific practice they have become the victims of recently.

The Mutual Film Corporation came near losing a valuable portion of its recently acquired, high-salaried acquisition last week, when one of Charlie Chaplin's oversized shoes became entangled in a working escalator. The technical department of the studio has completed a thirty-step escalator which is used as part of the interior of a department store for the first Mutual release, "The Floorwalker." In the making of a scene, Chaplin rode to the top of this and his shoe became caught between a step and a board placed there as a guard. Fortunately Chaplin's valet recently had the shoes heavily half-soled. This proved to be stiff enough to break the board and permitted the comedian to extricate the shoe. Chaplin was uninjured.

The escalator is but one of the mechanical wonders of the department store setting, as this includes a practical elevator, package and coin carrying devices, and other equipment of a similar nature to be found in a modern retail mercantile establishment. This is operated by a thirty horse-power electric motor. The setting covers the entire stage, as it has shoe, hat, toilet articles, dry goods, furs, auto sundries and numerous other departments. The company has been very successful in the making of this, and almost all of the scenes have been completed. It will consist of two reels.

Boulevard and Western avenue, Hollywood, have been completed, and are now in full operation, in the printing, toning and tinting departments of the company's first subject, "The Fall of a Nation," from a scenario by Thomas Dixon, Jr., author of "The Clansman." The story deals with an imaginary invasion of America, and the first draft of it has appeared serially in associated magazines used by a number of leading Sunday newspapers.

The laboratories as well as the entire plant of the corporation were completely planned before building was commenced. In most instances West Coast producing companies have started with a small plant and increased it as requirements made it necessary.

In the laying out of the laboratories, special attention was given to the arrangement so that there would be no lost motion. An efficiency system similar to that used in labor saving factories of other industries have been added here.

The storage rooms are near the receiving station at the studio, and adjoining these are rooms for loading and unloading magazines. Immediately across the hall are the developing, tinting, toning, fixing, washing, drying, printing, and positive developing rooms, in the order named. All rooms have two exits. Between the developing and washing rooms are spray showers for washing the film. The water used is thoroughly filtered, and the ventilating system installed, heats, washes, dries and filters the air. The drying rooms are of special construction which greatly facilitates ventilation, and make it impossible for any dust or dirt to settle on the film when the drum is in operation. Some new fire preventing apparatus have been installed in connection with the power system in every department.

Step printers are used and the printing is done by direct current automatic control, so that there is no chance of light fluctuation. This is made possible by flooding the through storage batteries. The capacity of the laboratories is two hundred thousand feet of film weekly. Immediately across the hall are located the cutting, assembling and projecting rooms.

Quick Change Garb on Duty Again

The quick change costumes of Detective Potts have been resurrected from the attic of the Christie Film Company studio, and were worn by Lee Moran in a picture made by Al. E. Christie. A young man accompanying his sweetheart to a week-end party, is made the victim of a crook, who exchanges a package containing a stolen necklace for the one in the pocket of the youth. Detective Potts, put on the trail by the loser of the necklace, traces the misplaced package to the week-end party where he employs the supposed butler who is in reality the thief, to aid him in getting the goods on the young people. Eddie Lyons and Ethel Lynn appear as the couple, Ed. Burns as the crook and Billie Rhodes as the hostess.

Nestor Director Horace Davey, accompanied by Stella Adams, Neil Burns and a flock of children and their mothers, are spending a week at San Diego, where they will film exteriors at the exposition for one or more comedies.

"Betty's Big Capture" is a one-reel Nestor burlesque on women police and gives Betty Compson the leading part, that of the recent addition to the police force. Lee Moran appears as Potts the detective, Eddie Lyons as the newspaper reporter, and Ed. Burns as the constable.

Director-comedian Rube Miller is able to resume work in Vogue films this week, after a serious illness, as the result of an accident several weeks ago, and is playing an important part in a burlesque underworld story. The principals of this are two second-story men, both trying to win the hand of the same girl who insists she will marry the one who brings her the most jewels.

They both rob the same house at the same time, and their attempts to escape from each other awaken the household. One passes the matter off by posing as a hero who attempted to capture the burglar, and is successful in this until the girl appears in court bedecked with the stolen jewels. Opposite Miller as the second crook is Art Traveras. Madge Kirby is the girl.

Vogue Director Jack Dillon is filming a baseball story, "Striking Out Strike-Out Murphy," with Paddy Maguire in the name part and Ben Turpin as his rival. The famous master of the spit-ball is overcome by his rival, and taken out of the game at the psychological moment and thereby loses the coveted prize, a bride, Rena Rogers.

"Playmates," which is being filmed at the Fine Arts studio by the Franklyn brothers, contains a story dealing with the reformation of two types of criminals. Ralph Lewis appears in this as the educated man who became a criminal, and marries his former accomplice, taken by Norma Talmadge. By exerting extraordinary will power this character reforms. Eugene Palette appears as a typical crook with inherent criminal instinct, reported as one beyond reform by society. The story is by Bernard McConville.

"The Bruiser" in Assembling Department

The Douglas Fairbanks' subject made under the working title "The Bruiser," is nearing completion, it now being in the hands of the assembling department. This subject was filmed under the direction of William Christy Cabanne, who has been selected to direct the next production in which Fairbanks appears. Other principals of the current subject are Bessie Love as the girl of the slums, William Lowry and Joseph E. Singleton.

John Emerson, who directed the making of the Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree subject, "Macbeth," has left for New York with the first print of this in eight reels, and there will make arrangements for the film to be shown as a part of the Shakespearean centennial revival.

Complete scenario for "Casey At the Bat," adapted by William E. Wing from the poem made famous by DeWolf Hopper, who claims he has given it more than eight thousand times, is now in the hands of Director Lloyd Ingraham, who is conducting rehearsals for this. Two complete baseball teams have been organized, and the actual filming of this subject will be commenced shortly. Marguerite Marsh has been chosen to play opposite Hopper in this subject. Comments at the studio are to the effect that Wing has built a very unusual comedy with much good business throughout, and the photoplay will answer the question of why Casey struck out.

No title has as yet been selected for the Granville Warwick subject being made by Alan Dwan and featuring Lillian Gish. In this she appears as the daughter of a southern father who believes the family above association with the neighbors. This gives the daughter but two associates—the colored servants—causing her to grow to womanhood untutored in the ways of the world. This practice on the part of the father results in his daughter becoming the scarlet woman of the section, and it is only after numerous trials that she vindicates herself. Appearing with Miss Gish in this are Sam DeGrasse, Mary Alden, William DeVall, Spottiswoode Aitken, Robert Anderson and Seymore Hastings.

Cameraman in Auto Race

Frank Good, former automobile racer, and at present cameraman at the Fine Arts studio, where he has photographed all subjects directed by the Franklyn brothers, was one of the contestants at the Corona road races, Saturday, April 8.

A large portion of the rear section of Universal City has been transferred into a circus lot with the big top surrounded by sideshows, menagerie, mess tents and dressing rooms, for the filming of "Peg O' The Ring," by Director Jacques Jaccard and with Ruth Stonehouse in the name part. The circus has been named Barnen's Mammoth Combine Shows. A regular performance was given when approximately one thousand Masons in Los Angeles to attend convention, were guests at Universal City and played the part of audience.

On this occasion red lemonade, peanuts and other ear-marks of circus day were in evidence on every hand. Several cameras were used in the making of these scenes, and the company taking part in addition to the audience numbered more than a hundred, including acrobats, aerial and equestrian artists and clowns. The collection of animals, many of them trained, which make up the Universal zoo were also used. The scenarios are being prepared by Olga Printzlau and Director Jaccard.

The last episode of the Universal "Graft" serial is now in production and is known as "The Final Conquest." In this Mayor Robert Hardin, taken by Director-Actor Richard Stanton, aided by Dorothy Maxwell and the police, succeeds in ridding the city of the last of the notorious graft ring, Stanford Stone its leader, and arresting the members of his criminal gang. The final scenes will be staged at the Los Angeles Gas works where a big battle between police and gangsters rages outside, while within Stone, with insane glee, throws the body of his unconscious helpmate into the fiery furnace thinking it is the body of the mayor, and a moment later topples over the victim of one of the gangster's stray bullets.

Always a Good Plot

A wife wishing to accept the gift of a former sweetheart, a handsome coat, serves as an excuse for a plot in which she learns of the very intimate relations of her husband and his stenographer, in the one-reel story by E. J. Clawson entitled "The Fur Trimmed Coat." This is being made by Rupert Julian, of the Universal staff, with a cast including Elsie Jane Wilson and Francelia Billington. The wife pawns the coat and gives the ticket to her husband to investigate, stating that she has found it. The husband in turn presents his stenographer with the coat.

"Number 16 Martin Place" is the title given a detective story written by Bess Meredith and being filmed for the Universal by Director Lloyd B. Carleton. Dorothy Davenport plays the lead part, that of a cabaret singer who aids a noted criminologist, played by Emory Johnson, in discovering the secret business of a cocaine dealer. Gretchen Lederer, Alfred Allen and Jack Abbott appear as members of the illicit business organization.

The diary of his sweetheart's grandmother, which he believes to be that of his sweetheart, gives the incentive to a modest youth to try the caveman style of wooing, and serves as the theme for "Club Law," a two-reel subject written by Harvey Gates and being produced at Universal City by Edward LeSaint. Stella Rosetta appears in the part of the young woman, independent and self-reliant, Harry Carey is the timid wooer, but decidedly aggressive when in the presence of men, and Hayward Mack is cast to play the part of the ring leader of a white slave gang who attempts to kidnap Miss Rosetta.

Universal Director Lynn Reynolds and company of twenty-five headed by Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul, went to San Diego the first of last week, where they commenced the filming of "His Date In Honolulu," a five-reel subject. While on the way to and from the southern California city by boat, the ocean scenes were made, and at San Diego the Honolulu village at the exposition served as settings. Upon the company's return to Los Angeles they went to Palm canyon for mountain scenery and later to Santa Barbara.

The story for this subject has a strong plot with an English lord, a son of a wealthy packer, and the daughter of a socially ambitious mother, appearing as the three points of the eternal triangle, with a crooked detective and a defaulting cashier working with the youth's old-fashioned father to induce him to disinherit the son. There are a number of good parts in this subject which are taken by George Hernandez, Lule Warrenton, Normand Hammond, Fred Church, Bertram Grassby and Jack Curtis.

W. W. Chapin, publisher of the San Francisco Call, Seattle Post-Intelligencer and Chicago Herald, accompanied by Mrs. Chapin, spent two days at "U" City this week, the guest of Publicity Director M. G. Jonas.

"The Argonauts" in Ten Reels

The Argonauts Company, with studio and laboratory at Monrovia, Cal., has completed its first subject entitled "The Argonauts," which consists of ten reels, and arrangement will be completed within the next few days for the premier showing of this historic subject which portrays actual conditions and incidents of the '49 days in California. The subject is to be handled as a theatrical production, and for the next few months but two or three prints will be used. The initial showing will be made in Los Angeles, but as yet no announcement has been made concerning the time or place. Edward L. Grafton, who was manager of the Mission Play Company, is the general manager of the Argonauts Company.

While eighteen thousand people occupied the grand stand and bleachers, intensely interested in the opening game of the Pacific Coast League, Milton H. Farney, producer of Horsley Cub comedies, touched off an explosion to wreck a building, and came near causing a stampede by frightening the great crowds. The Horsley studio is located on ground adjoining that of the Washington Street park. The scene made was for the coming subject, "The Traitor," and three charges of powder of fifteen pounds each were touched off by electricity at the same time. These were distributed in three parts of the two-story building, and proved to be of adequate force to almost wholly destroy the structure.

"Ordeal" Star Passes Through Real One

Appearing in court in the uniform of an English army officer twenty-six hours later than his notice provided, William H. Clifford, Horsley leading man charged with exceeding the speed limit, was successful in persuading the judge that the case should be dismissed. Clifford in his own defence presented a very forceful plea, quoting many of the prominent dramatists from the time of Shakespeare to the present day. His call at the court room was appreciated by all of the attaches and the horde of others waiting to answer similar charges, and the charge of speeding and contempt of court were dismissed.

At the time Clifford was on his way to a location for scenes in the two reel subject, "The Ordeal," being filmed by Director or Charles Swickard. This is a sea story in which, at the time of a wreck, the husband binds his wife and baby to a floating debris and they land alone on a south sea island. She becomes the goddess of the savages as the result of curing a native afflicted with poisoning, thought to be a malignant disease. Later she is rescued by her husband who takes an expedition to the island in search of her. The wife is played by Margaret Gibson, and Louise Minaugh, aged five years, the important child part.

While making a final scene for the Horsley five-reel subject, "The Conscience of John David," Crane Wilbur received painful burns about the hand when he attempted to open a door, the knob of which had been heated by the fire. Some very unusual scenes appear in this subject showing the destruction of between forty and fifty shacks occupied by Mexican laborers and their families. The scenes were taken recently during a big fire in Los Angeles.

Van Zimmerman, who has been assistant to Director Robert Broadwell, has left the Horsley studio.

Keystone Director Dell Henderson and company last week used the Horsley Bostock animals in scenes for a coming Keystone Triangle comedy, and were aided in the making of these by Vera Robson and Charles Gaye.

MAYO BUSY ON "GETHSEMANE" FROM JEFFERSON SCENARIO

Special to Motion Picture News.

San Diego, Cal., April 15.

Director Melvin Mayo, of the Lubin company at Coronado, has been busy the past week with the filming of a three-reel picture entitled "Gethsemane," from a scenario by L. V. Jefferson, which has required the employment of a large corps of extras. In it the part of Walter Stanley, a young minister of high ideals, a social settlement worker who has become the angel of the slums, is taken by Alan Forrest.

Cecil Van Auker and George Routh are seen respectively as Dean Carroll and Earl Bond, two young physicians. As Maud Carroll, the doctor's wife, Adda Gleason is again with the Lubin company in this picture after an absence of four months in Los Angeles, during which time she had the title role in Helen Hunt Jackson's "Ramona," which is having such a run at Clune's Auditorium in that city.

Other members of the cast in "Gethsemane" are Lucy Peyton as a trained nurse; Evelyn Page as Theda Harrington, the daughter of a wealthy patient of the doctors, Ben Hopkins appearing as the father.

Millard K. Wilson is a new acquisition at the Lubin studio, where he plans to produce some of his own scenarios. Mr. Wilson is a native of Kentucky, and had some years of experience in stock on the legitimate stage before appearing before the camera. He has been with Kalem, Universal and Signal, and has played leads in a number of well known pictures, including "Measure of a Man," "Idyl of the Hills," "A Mother's Atonement" and "To Redeem an Oath."

Capt. Wilbert Melville's private yacht, the Vergana, made a record run from San Pedro to San Diego last week of six hours and five minutes. The neat craft has been fully equipped, and the captain is now making his home on board.

Members of the Rolin Film Company have been at the exposition making some comedy films of the class of Phunphilms. Harold C. Lloyd and Beebe Daniels were the stars of the productions. President Whiting, his secretary, W. H. Doane, and Clarke Irvine were in the party.

Tyrone Power of the Universal was present at the production of "The Servant in the House" by the Sock and Buskin Club, a local organization, at the Empress theatre Saturday, and made a short, informal address before the curtain.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

THE general revival of interest in Shakespeare, occasioned by the tercentenary celebration this year, is making itself felt in the Eastern film studios. The old folios are being brushed up and handed over to the great scenario writers. Already two "Romeo and Juliets" are on the way, and Thanhouser has launched his original contribution, which is called: "Master Shakespeare, Strolling Player." It is even said that one of the Shakespearian tragedies is to be filmed.

Elaborate preparations are now under way for the Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will appear. Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, who recently finished "A Million a Minute," have gone to Baltimore, where they will spend a ten days' vacation with Mr. Bushman's family before beginning actual work on the classic.

John W. Noble will direct "Romeo and Juliet," which is to be made in six parts. Sets are now being built at the Rolfe studios, and Mr. Noble, with William Bailey, his assistant, are making daily automobile trips over Long Island in search of appropriate locations for the exteriors. They have already located an old castle on the North Shore, which will be used in many of the principal scenes, and in the old streets of Southampton other outdoor scenes will be taken. Several of these Southampton streets, opened prior to 1650, furnish an excellent old world atmosphere. On its completion the picture will be shown at the College of the City of New York before being released.

Barrymore in "The Quitter"

The other "Romeo and Juliet" is to be produced by the World Film Corporation. No announcement of the details has been made, but the inference that Juliet is to be the featured character is drawn from the fact that Clara Kimball Young will be the star. The scenario has been written by Robert Hastings Goodman, who is said to have followed the Shakespearian story very closely.

Lionel Barrymore, who has just completed his work in "Dorian's Divorce" for the Metro program, being starred in that production with Grace Valentine, will be starred alone in "The Quitter," a five-part feature which has just been put into production. The exterior scenes will be photographed along the Mexican border, and the company does not anticipate that it will be much of a holiday. Motion picture operators are experiencing considerable difficulty in that locale at present.

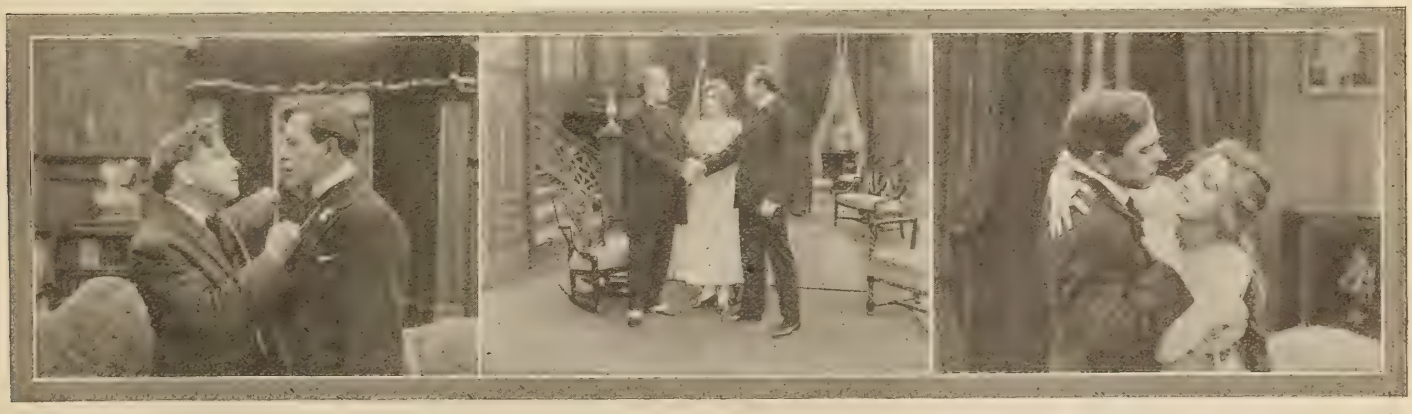
MAUD HILL (Metro)

Most of the time the company is in New Mexico it will be obliged to live in tents. Every member has been supplied with a special permit to carry firearms, and will be well protected against raiders or intruders. Leander de Cordova, who was recently made an assistant director to Charles Horan, who will direct the production, is expected to be of great help to the Americans. He is a linguist, and among other languages he speaks the kind of Mexican heard along the border.

In the cast with Mr. Barrymore will be William Davidson, Julius Cowles and other well known artists. "The Quitter" was picturized by Harry O. Hoyt from the novel of the same name by Isola Forrester.

Earle Williams is being starred in a thirteen part serial photoplay under the direction of Wally Van, in which the celebrated actor will be seen as a motor speeder, and a hero of all around daring.

Variety of Scenes in Williams Subject



The new serial is said to be fraught with a thousand thrills, and in spite of the fact that much of the production was made during the winter, it has a variety of outdoor scenes, as well as many elaborate interiors.

Lucille Lee Stewart is working under the direction of Ralph W. Ince at the Vitagraph Bay Shore, L. I., studios, in a feature in which she will portray the principal female role. This is the first starring vehicle in which the new Vitagrapher has appeared, and she shows promise, according to Director Ince, of becoming a successful screen lead.

Joe Cox, of California, who is reported to have stopped Champion Jess Willard, is at the Vitagraph company's studio in Brooklyn working in the pictures. He is "acting" in a picture with a burlesque boxing match between Hughie Mack, the 400-pound comedian, and Boer Rodel.

Among other pugilists who added realism to the picture was Harlem Tommy Murphy, who acted as one of Mack's seconds. Tommy, since his retirement from the ring, has become a regular film actor, and has appeared in a number of recent pictures.

Lawrence Semon, a newspaper cartoonist, who is directing the picture, staged the bout with as much atmosphere and realism

Miss Pearson Begins Second Fox Picture

Virginia Pearson has begun work under Director Kenean Buel on her second Fox film. The story concerns a society woman who becomes enmeshed through her fondness for gambling, of her temporary ruin and ultimate triumph. In the cast with Miss Pearson are Albert Swanson, John Dillon, Ida Darling, Miss Dixon and Harry Leone.

Theda Bara's new picture to follow "The Eternal Sapho" will be of a type never before selected for her, studio officials say. This new picture was begun early in the week by Director Bert Bracken. In the cast with Miss Bara in this production are Claire Whitney, William H. Tooker, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Stuart Holmes, Ben

THEDA BARA

Deeley, Joe Burke and others—an all-star production.

Director Will S. Davis stopped work for a minute the other day to ask assistance from Stuart Holmes, the villainous villain of the William Fox films.

"Give me a definition of the word 'responsibility'?" he said.

"Suppose a man had only two suspender buttons left, and one of these came off," replied Holmes. "The responsibility on the one remaining would be very great."

The "Iron Claw," Pathé's new serial, is full of "stunts" where the players take all sorts of chances. While directing a fire scene in Jersey City on April 4 Edward Jose was startled to see one of his players, Charles Reveda, fall from a scaling ladder into the flames. Reveda had become stupefied from the smoke, and lost his grip. He was burned on the face and hands, but after being treated at his home returned to work a day later.

Parrot Crabbed Scenes

Evangeline, the temperamental "Iron Claw" parrot, has acquired many of the characteristics of the real star. The other day she "crabbed" scene after scene by insisting upon leaving her perch and occupying a prominent position right before the camera. After several disastrous attempts to make Evangeline realize her place as a minor player, Director Jose let her alone and left on a hunt for court plaster. He is now a believer in "safety first."

President George K. Spoor, of Essanay, has sent a troupe of players to Chattanooga, Tenn., to film a new feature play, "According to the Code," in the exact locality in which the author laid his plot. The play, written by Charles Michelson, deals with a love story of the Civil war and the meeting of the aged principals today—more than a half century afterward.

Calvert to Direct Stone

Lewis S. Stone, stage star, who recently finished "The Havoc" for Essanay, will take the lead, with Marguerite Clayton. E. H. Calvert will direct the piece and take the heavy lead. Sydney Ainsworth will take the other principal part, also a heavy.

The few interiors of the play will be taken in the Chicago studios upon the return of the players from the south. A dozen members of the stock company went to Tennessee from Chicago. Mr. Stone, who had been on a shooting trip in the Rocky Mountains, following his work with Gladys Hanson and Bryant Washburn in "The Havoc," joined the party at Chattanooga.

The play requires the use of cavalry, which will be obtained in the south. It also requires a close adherence to type and settings which Mr. Spoor believed could not be better obtained than in the natural locality of the subject. The same country in which Director Calvert filmed the famous "Tish" series of Mary Roberts Rinehart will provide the locations for "According to the Code."

An event of unusual interest at the George Kleine studios last week was the marriage of H. H. McCollum, who has attracted so much attention recently by his work in support of Harry Watson, Jr., in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer." The bride is Lottie M. Meaney, authoress of the Cort theatre success, "Pay Day." The marriage occurred Sunday last at the Little Church Around the Corner.

WALLY VAN AND EARLE WILLIAMS (Vitagraph)

The happy couple are installed at 343 St. Nicholas avenue, New York.

A Modern Mona Vanna

"The Woman of It," by Harley Knowles, starring Carlyle Blackwell and Ethel Clayton, is shortly to be released by the World Film Corporation. It is a story of a modern Mona Vanna.

Richard Barlow, a wealthy manufacturer, loses his wealth through the machinations of enemies, becomes broken in health, and his wife, Thelma, thoroughly in love with him, is willing to sacrifice herself in a last wild effort to save him.

One of the most dramatic scenes in the film is that in which Barlow's factory is seen to go up in smoke, and another is the scene in which Thelma meets Howard Barlow, the brother-in-law, at his apartments.

gallons of white liquor was illicitedly made. The locality has long been cleared of the law breakers, but their perilous single horse trails along the mountain sides, their old shacks, distilling kettles and other paraphernalia still remain. Altogether fifteen players were in the Lockwood-Allison company, including Howard Truesdell and Lester Cuneo.

Edmund Breese, who was last seen on the Metro program in "The Lure of Heart's Desire," produced by Popular Plays and Players, has finished the first scenes in "The Spell of the Yukon." This five part feature production is based upon the poem of Robert W. Service.

Many of the scenes are laid in picturesque Alaskan locales, and the spirit of the frozen northland prevails in the general theme of the story. However, there is a sharp contrast, in the introduction of some very interesting glimpses of New York in society and along Broadway.

Mr. Breese is supported by a cast including Evelyn Brent, Christine Mayo, Arthur Hoops and others. Burton King is directing.

Fire inspectors who conduct a weekly drill around motion picture studios in New York City have awarded first prize to the fire crew in the Rolfe-Metro studio at Sixty-first street and Central Park West, for the first quarter of the year ending March 31.

Daniel Hogan, head property man at the studio, is chief of their local fire department. He has trained his crew to such a fine point that less than a minute after the ringing of the first alarm, every man is at his post, the hose is stretched over the studio floor, sprinklers ready for action, windows opened leading to the fire escapes, and everyone ordered off the studio floor.

The Mirror Films, Inc., began its third photoplay, featuring Nat C. Goodwin, last week at the Glendale studio of the company. Mr. Goodwin stepped out of a ludicrous comedy character into one of tragic potentialities. He virtually took off the make-up of one character to put on that of the other.

An excellent cast has been selected for Mr. Goodwin's third picture. His leading woman is Zola Telmzart, with Anita Booth as the ingenue. Mabel Wright and Eugenie Elba have been engaged for the feature as well as Richard Neill, who has the heavy role. Lawrence Marston is directing the picture, the script for which was prepared by Adrian Johnson.

Walter McNamara, who has just finished a five-reel comedy for the Mirror Films, Inc., with Nat Goodwin as the star, is promising another sociological film. He will soon start work on the new feature.

Miss McCoy at Work in South Sea Scenes

Under the direction of Edwin Middleton, Gertrude McCoy is now working on the south sea scenes in the Gaumont Mutual Masterpicture in which she is to be starred. Although this feature is not to be released until May 15, it is now well under way.

Excellent locations for that part of the story depicting the life of the heroine and her rescuer on what they found to be an uninhabited island have been found near Jacksonville, Fla. As the Gaumont winter studio is located there, the players have had their home life at the same time that some of the most thrilling scenes of the photodrama were being filmed.

One of the big features of "The Isle of Love" is the burning of an ocean liner in mid-ocean. It is in these scenes that Earl O. Schenck as the wireless operator rescues Miss McCoy, first from fire, and then from death by drowning as they flounder in the water. Other picturesque scenes advance the story at a small seaside resort where the heroine first meets the man whom later she scorns and then learns to love. Miss Iva Shepard has an important role in this production. Others in Miss McCoy's support are Robert Clugston, Charles W. Travis and W. J. Butler.

Unicorn Will Enter Field with 21 Reels a Week

One and Two Reel Subjects Will Be Issued Under Following Brands: Supreme, Gayety, Hiawatha, Judy, Buffalo, Hippo, Puritan, Lily, Jockey, Rancho, Sunset and Utah

ANNOUNCEMENT was made in New York this week of the completed organization of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, and exchanges in all the principal cities of the country.

Beginning May 1, the Unicorn program of one and two-reel subjects will be released at the rate of twenty-one reels a week, and will place at the disposal of exhibitors a complete line of short pictures to be run either as a complete program or as supplementary to a program of features.

The Unicorn subjects will be comedies, dramas and western films. The brand names will be Supreme, Gayety, Hiawatha, Judy, Buffalo, Hippo, Puritan, Lily, Jockey, Rancho, Sunset and Utah.

The Unicorn corporation offers itself to exhibitors as a complete and carefully organized exchange service, under the general management of Ike Schlank. Mr. Schlank is an old showman, known all over the country as a man experienced in the various lines of amusement, and one well fitted to supervise an organization as extensive as this new exchange system.

Not only has he been a theatrical manager, producer and theatreowner, but for several years he was an independent exchange man in the middle west, especially St. Louis, Kansas City and Denver. He has produced pictures himself, and is thoroughly familiar with every branch of the industry.

Assisting as general western division manager will be J. A. Eslow, who has just resigned as head of one of the big New England exchanges, and who is known to exchangemen and exhibitors in every section of the country.

The exchanges already arranged for, and their managers, are: Boston, Fred B. Murphy; New York, W. L. Merrill; Buffalo, Fred. B. Murphy; Philadelphia, A. G. Steen; St. Louis, Sam. Werner; Kansas City, J. W. Morgan; Minneapolis, L. J. Meyberg; Chicago, L. J. Schlaifer; Cleveland, (manager not announced); Pittsburgh, Jack Kraemer; Detroit, W. D. Ward; Cincinnati, Harry E. Coffey.

In addition, exchanges will be opened in Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver and Washington.

The service to exhibitors will be complete, including all the most effective advertising aids, cuts, paper and displays.

Mr. Schlank is now touring the middle west and south, organizing the exchanges.

The Unicorn corporation announces that its rates will be unusually attractive to exhibitors. The highest grade of one and two-reel films will be supplied at prices well below the average of those now prevailing.

PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES FEEL GOOD EFFECTS OF SPRING AND REPORT EXCELLENT BUSINESS

THAT H. H. Buxbaum, who recently went to Philadelphia as manager of the General Film Company's exchange, is giving satisfaction is evidenced by the substantial compliment paid him by the heads of the company a short time ago. The Philadelphia branch has more bookings to its credit for "Social Pirates" than any other General Film office in the entire country.

The Ham and Bud and the Sis Hopkins comedies are moving exceptionally well.

Good prices are being obtained for reissues of Francis Bushman films and Biograph comedies, both of which are enjoying renewed popularity.

A departure in the General office is the consideration of letters from patrons of theatres as well as exhibitors. Thus mistakes can be rectified and increased efficiency gained. This departure is causing favorable comment from the theatres using General service, and explains in part the fast increasing business of the Quaker City office.

H. E. Schwalbe of the Electric Theatre Supply Company finds Triangle exceedingly popular in the Philadelphia district, which is under his control.

The Arcadia theatre which runs first Triangle releases a whole week is often puzzled as to which of the two—in their judgment equally good pictures—to choose. Douglas Fairbanks in the "Habit of Happiness," crowded this little theatre to the doors during the whole week of its performance.

J. S. Hebrew paid a visit last week to the Washington exchange of the V-L-S-E which is a branch of the Philadelphia office.

Edward Krupa of the Monarch Film Company has just obtained the franchise for the releases of the American Standard Motion Picture Company of Chicago. One feature a week will be released, starting May 1. "Tom and Jerry," a twenty-reel serial comedy running for ten weeks, will be the first to appear in that section.

On the Chaplin "Carmen" of Essanay nothing has been decided as yet in regard to its first showing in Philadelphia. Inquiries, however, are many and curiosity is rife as to this much-heralded release.

C. V. Carrick of the Interstate Feature Films finds a tendency in his district for the neighborhood houses to gradually return to a service program, thus cutting somewhat the long features. Three new Philadelphia theatres have taken on the Universal service this week.

The release date of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," with Pavlowa, has not been settled as regards Philadelphia, but will be soon. Several theatres are bidding for first showing of this feature, but that, too, is in abeyance. It is known, however, that the theatre chosen will be a big one, suitable for a long run.

Eighty-seven theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania are flying Bluebirds in one week. These "Birds" are released for flight by the Fairmount Film Exchange, of which Robert Lynch is chief bird man.

Now it is nine prints of the first Chaplin Mutual release that the Philadelphia Mutual Exchange has had to obtain, and all nine booked solid for three weeks in the territory. How many more will have to be gotten with the release date a month off, deponent sayeth not. J. W. Pope, Jr., the manager, took a trip to his branch offices at Wilkesbarre and Harrisburk the past week and found conditions favorable. The Philadelphia office has just added new equipment, completing its furnishings.

LUST, WASHINGTON, D. C., BUYS 200 REELS FROM DAY, AND MAY ESTABLISH SOUTHERN BRANCH

THE largest financial and film deal by an individual Washington, D. C., exchange has just been accomplished by Sidney B. Lust, manager of the United Film Service and the Criterion Film Exchange. Mr. Lust has just purchased from Lawrence Day, formerly of the Famous Players Features Exchange and now manager of the Washington Metro Film Corporation, the Famous Players Feature Corporation for that territory, about two hundred reels.

This collection includes many of the famous stars now seen in Paramount, Metro, Fox, World and other features. Among some of the productions that have come into Mr. Lust's possession are "The Heart of Maryland," "Sea Wolf," "John Barleycorn," "The Tigress," "Shore Acres," "One of Our Girls" and "The Little Gray Lady."

In addition to these, Mr. Lust has also taken over the productions of the New Film Company of New York for his territory. These comprise many successes of the stage that are having equal success on the screen.

Mr. Lust has also contracted for the pictures of Charley Chaplin, Mable and Fatty. Already there is a spirit of rivalry as to which house down town will show these films first, but to date no contract has been signed.

He has also the states right for Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Punctured Romance" for the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and North and South Carolina.

"In making this purchase," remarked Mr. Lust, "I mean to bear out my contention that a popular photoplay can make good with return engagements even after having been released a year. Those who enjoyed it when it was first shown will be ready to see it again, and those who missed it will be glad of the opportunity of seeing it now."

Four big war productions have also been purchased by Mr. Lust for distribution. These are "The Battle and Fall of Warsaw," "Italy and Austria at War," "Fighting with the Allies," and "War—World Wide." These come as their first presentation to many in that territory.

With the acquisition of this material, Mr. Lust has enlarged his office, taking over practically the entire building of 903 E street. He is also negotiating to establish a branch exchange in Raleigh, N. C., for the special distribution of some of his big productions that have not had a thorough showing in the South. This will in no way interfere with his branches at Kimball, W. Va., and Baltimore, Md.

THIS JOKE AF-FORDS "MUTUAL" DELIGHT AND "GENERAL" LAUGHTER

Al Durning, he of the "Uncle Al" sobriquet, than whom no other exchangeman is better known in New Orleans, tells a new Ford joke.

It seems that Al and S. T. Ford, representative of the General in New Orleans, were competitors on the road and racing unknown to a little town in which a new theatre had opened.

Al thought to steal a march, and accordingly hired an automobile to take him twenty-five miles across sticky country roads. Seven miles before he hit the town, he inquired of a native if he had seen "Ford" around there, and the pumpkin replied that there hadn't been a Ford through in a week, although a Chalmers had passed a little in advance of Mr. Durning's chariot.

To make a long story short, Durning got to the new exhibitor, signed a contract and departed. Ford came later, and although not an early bird, managed to get a contract also.

In the language of George Ade, there was Mutual satisfaction, and a General shaking of hands, while the Cigar Bill was Split.

AUGER HOLDS CLASS IN SALESMANSHIP IN OMAHA AND SIGNS CHAPLIN CONTRACT AS EXAMPLE

E. AUGER, special representative for the Mutual Film Corporation, left Omaha for Kansas City April 6 after ten busy days spent straightening out kinks for a big boom at the Omaha exchange.

"They formerly called us efficiency experts," said Mr. Auger, "but we are special representatives now. I have been in St. Louis, where business is good, but it does my heart good to hit this middle western section, where things are actually booming. Only one fault I find—you need larger and better theatres. You are coming to it, of course, but you should hurry a bit."

While in Omaha Mr. Auger held a class in salesmanship at which the roadmen and, according to Manager Max Weisfeldt, the manager himself, were students. Practical demonstrations were given by Mr. Auger.

Taking Mr. Weisfeldt with him, he went to Sioux City and there signed the Hipp theatre for Charley Chaplin and the entire Mutual program. This was the biggest contract ever entered into in Sioux City and, posing with managers Miller and Schulkin. Mr. Auger and Manager Weisfeldt had their pictures taken in the act of signing the instrument. A trip was made to Des Moines, where the Majestic signed a big contract.

At the Empress theatre in Omaha, posing with managers Ledoux and Le Marquand, their pictures were taken in the act of signing a big contract for service. Mr. Auger saw other exhibitors and declared them to be highly representative of the up-to-date men in the business.

When he packed his grip for Kansas City a brief survey showed the Mutual has among its customers over half the exhibitors in Omaha, while sixteen of the Omaha houses use the entire output of the exchange.

This is the biggest business the exchange ever has done here.

"The motion picture business has about reached the climax as to the number of houses in the middle west," said Mr. Auger. "The trend will now be toward better houses. They will come to it more rapidly than you think.

"That is one thing, above all others, I would recommend middle western exhibitors to watch for in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. There they will find just what I mean—an up-to-the-minute story of what exhibitors are doing elsewhere. That is the very best way to determine what is best to do here.

"Mr. Weisfeldt is the right manager for the Omaha territory and a number of exhibitors have told me personally how he has gone out of his way to aid. The day has come when the exchange must co-operate with the exhibitor in promoting the things which go for their best interests."

Mr. Weisfeldt announced, also, that "The Girl and the Game" is now booked in eighty-five per cent. of the theatres throughout Nebraska and a number of inquiries have already been received concerning "The Secret of the Submarine," the series to be released soon. "The serial demand is not dead," he insists. "They pay big if you get the right kind. The right kind must be short, sweet and with the kick that brings the subject home to the spectator. Good serials will always be in demand." E. W. Jansen has been representing the Mutual in booking "The Girl and the Game."

FISHMAN REPORTS DEMAND FOR E. & R. JUNGLE COMEDIES

N. L. Lefkowitz has been appointed assistant manager of the Standard Film Service Company, with offices in the Peter Smith building, Detroit. J. C. Fishman recently returned to Detroit to become manager of this branch.

He reports a very active demand for the E. & R. Jungle comedy pictures and the "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons, which are being shown first-run at the Broadway-Strand theatre in Detroit with considerable success.

FRED B. MURPHY DELIVERS "INSPIRATION" TALK AT QUARTERLY MEET OF UNITED

AT the quarterly meeting of the branch and district managers of the United Film Service, held in Albany, N. Y., recently, reports of progress made in the preceding three months were heard and an "inspiration" talk delivered by Fred B. Murphy, president and treasurer of the corporation.

The United is a large independent film service, operating in New York and New England, with the exception of Greater New York. Its capacity is twelve reels of new subjects weekly, and the open market is invaded for any independent films suitable to the company's clientele.

After the meeting, Mr. Murphy gave his views on the present condition of the film industry to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"Now, my idea of the moving picture business is that it is a five and ten cent business," said he. "The days of the big fortunes was when the business was all five and ten cent, and money was made by those who produced one, two and three-reel features. The whole business is likened so often to a gigantic mushroom that grew fast and is now of such large proportions that it promises to split roof and stem. What will arise from the roots should be the cause of much thought, for it will be the nature of that plant that will make for the permanency of the motion picture industry as an industry," remarked Mr. Murphy. Then he continued:

"I will predict with surety now the elimination of high-priced stars, and in any event the nearer to standardization of the players themselves. Some great intellectual giant is most apt to arise at the psychological moment, some Napoleon of business and master tactician, who can so array the forces and co-ordinate the fittest who survive the crisis that is coming, that the great industry will be a hived one and not a rambling one, and all who are in the business will have fair opportunity to get their share. And I predict, at that time the independent film man will have to be reckoned with."

BOSTON EXCHANGES REPORT EXCELLENT BUSINESS—PATHE MOVES TO ITS NEW BUILDING

LOWE'S ORPHEUM, Boston, Mass., has signed for Bluebird features for the first three days of the week for fifty-two weeks.

Alonzo Hacking, retiring manager of the General Film Company in Boston, was presented with a diamond ring on his departure to take charge of the General's office in New Haven.

Samuel Grant, of "The Battle Cry of Peace" and the Hannibal Film Company, was in New York last week looking for new productions.

The Pathé Exchange has moved from Tremont street to its new building, corner Ferdinand and Isabella streets.

Simon Gerroir, who erected most of the film exchange buildings in Boston and who was called the greatest expert on fire laws of the state as applied to those buildings, died in Boston last week.

Harry J. Shepard, from the New York office of Bluebird, was a visitor to Boston Manager Frank Jacques last week.

The Globe theatre is using Triangle pictures, beginning this week.

Charles Phillips, representative for Fox Film Company, started Monday on a three weeks' trip.

R. L. McIntire, formerly of the New Comique, Montpelier, Vt., is now special representative for the International Film Service.

LOS ANGELES BOARD OF TRADE ASKS FOR PROMPT PAYMENT

Los Angeles Film Exchangemen's Board of Trade members have started a campaign which they think will eventually result in clearing the books of all accounts against exhibitors now conducting the theatres in the district, which embraces southern California, a portion of Nevada and Arizona.

All creditors of Los Angeles exchanges will be given a specified time to make settlement for past indebtedness. If they fail to comply with this request of the film exchanges, it is understood the exchanges expect to cut off service until payment is made. No announcement has been made concerning this by officers of the Exchangemen's Board of Trade.

SWEIGERT, MANAGER OF INTERNATIONAL IN QUAKER CITY MADE RAPID RISE

THE newly formed Philadelphia branch of the International Film Service, Inc., is already busily at work in its temporary quarters at 1237 Vine street. As soon as alterations can be completed, the office will be moved to a permanent home at 1335 Vine street, where it will occupy commodious quarters.

Earle W. Sweigert, the newly appointed manager, started as a booker for the General Film Company and became head salesman for the Pathé company.

In the latter position he attracted attention from having won a Gold Rooster fob in a salesmen contest.

With the International is also Robert Ettris, formerly manager of the Philadelphia World office and later special representative for Lubin in a continental tour. Mr. Ettris was recently with the Transit Motor Company, but has returned to the film game as head salesman of International in Philadelphia.

R. W. Trimble, former head booker of the Twenty-third street branch of the General Film Company, will be booker for the new concern.

The office has obtained the first contract on "The Mysteries of Myra" series, which will be released on April 24 as the first feature of the new firm.

G. Michaels, for years chief roadman in the Philadelphia territory for the Greater New York Company, until that firm went out of business, is now head salesman for the Tri-State Star Feature Company.

A. S. Glenn, formerly with the Electric Theatre Supply Company, is now representing the special scenic pictures made for the Philadelphia and Western Railroad Company.

The Metro exchange in the Quaker City has started the largest advertising stunt ever undertaken by a Philadelphia branch, it is said.

Fifty daily newspapers in eastern Pennsylvania will carry, once a week, two hundred and forty lines of Metro advertisements, accompanied by pictures of Metro stars.

J. D. Clark, Metro manager, feels that as Metro pictures are now ranking with the best, he cannot advertise them too largely.

This method of advertising will enable wide-awake exhibitors to connect their theatre advertisements with the big display, and thus benefit greatly through the campaign being so widely carried on.

Herbert Given, who has just returned from a trip around the state in the interests of Paramount pictures, reports conditions particularly good in his line. The Burton Holmes Travelogues are especially popular, taking the lead over other travel pictures in many places.

Julian M. Solomon, Jr., advertising manager of the Pallas pictures and Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in New York, paid a short visit to Philadelphia last week on business connected with his office.

Mr. Solomon went from Philadelphia to New York, although he hails from Savannah, Ga., originally. In Philadelphia he was manager of the Susquehanna theatre and also representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

IRWIN MAKES TOUR OF V-L-S-E EXCHANGES

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, has just returned to New York, following a series of "flying trips" to the Big Four branch offices, in the middle West and Eastern territory. These included visits to Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges. The tour was for the purpose of getting in touch personally with conditions in each territory, and to meet the many new recruits to the Big Four organization, which its constant expansion during the past few months has made necessary. The trip will be supplemented by visits to other offices, until the V-L-S-E's complete circuit has been completed.

Mr. Irwin met a number of prominent exhibitors during his tour, and at Minneapolis a gathering composed of leading members of the Northwestern Exhibitors' League called upon him and complimented him upon the steady success attained by his company's policies during the past few months.

BOWLES GIVES PRIVATE SHOWINGS TO NEWSPAPER MEN

George H. Bowles, publicity man for the Bluebird Photoplays in Kansas City, makes a specialty of giving private exhibitions of releases to newspaper men. Coincident with the appearance of Madame Pavlowa, the famous Russian artiste, in Kansas City, Mr. Bowles gave a showing of her famous picture, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," to a group of newspaper men.

His former connection with the Kansas City Star has taught him the value of this kind of publicity.

EXCHANGE NEED NOT SELL TO MORE THAN ONE THEATRE IN A TOWN

The Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D. C., has decided that an exchange need not sell to more than one theatre in a town unless it so desires. This decision was in the form of a conference ruling on an application for the issuance of a complaint wherein it was alleged that a motion picture distributing company refused to supply the applicant with films on the ground that another exhibitor in the same city had been given the exclusive right to exhibit the films of the distributing company. The commission found that under ordinary circumstances, and in the absence of intent thus to accomplish an unlawful purpose, neither the Federal Trade Commission Act nor the Clayton Act prohibits a corporation from dealing exclusively with one firm in a given territory. Upon the facts presented, it held, a refusal to supply others in such territory is therefore not unlawful.

BERMAN WELL PLEASED WITH METRO BUSINESS IN ST. LOUIS AND KANSAS CITY

Charles Werner, manager of the St. Louis branch of the Metro Corporation, 3618 Olive street, was visited last week by H. M. Berman, head of the Kansas City office. Mr. Berman reports favorable increases in Metro business, and says he expects the $250,000 newspaper advertising campaign which will soon be put into practice by the Metro Corporation to be of invaluable benefit to the exhibitor.

The Universal Exchange at 2116 Locust street, St. Louis, was visited by Mr. Royer, of the firm of McNeill and Royer, of Greenville, Ill., who have just opened the Gem, a two hundred capacity house, in that town. Mr. Royer was on a hunt for supplies, and making arrangements for his program.

Joe Levy, manager of the Fox Exchange, at 3632 Olive street, St. Louis, has returned from a short trip through the territory covered by his office, and he is full of praise for the manner in which small town exhibitors have taken up display advertising.

Floyd Lewis, head of the St. Louis Triangle exchange in the Plaza building, received a call last week from R. C. Seery, manager of the Chicago office.

SCREEN CLUB FORMING IN CINCINNATI

A Screen Club, composed of exchange managers, is to be organized in Cincinnati shortly, according to plans formulated by C. E. Holah, V-L-S-E manager and C. C. Hite, manager of the Triangle branch there. A number of meetings have been held among the exchange men who are members of the Cuvier-Press Club, an organization controlled by newspapermen.

At a meeting scheduled for last week in the Press Club the exchange men will entertain members of the press with a screen performance to which exchange members not affiliated with the Cuvier-Press Club have been invited. Under the plan proposed by Mr. Holah the exchange men will form their organization within that of the newspapermen's club. This plan is similar in many respects to the system under which the Exhibitors' League has become a subsidiary organization of the Chamber of Commerce. It is believed a great advantage will result to the exchange men by reason of the organization and the affiliation with the press.

OMAHA GENERAL EXCHANGE GETS EXHIBITOR LETTERS ON KALEM LOBBY DISPLAY

The General is putting out a novel advertisement with its new Kalem series, "The Social Pirates." A ship model, five and one-half feet high, made to stand in the lobby of the theatre, is furnished.

On the sails of the ship are huge portraits of Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby, who have the leading parts. Manager C. W. Taylor, of the exchange in Omaha, has received several letters commending the General on this new idea in advertisement.

V-L-S-E HOUSE ORGAN ISSUED FOR "EXTRAS" AT KANSAS CONVENTION

E. R. Pearson, manager of the V-L-S-E branch office at Kansas City, is a strong believer in journalistic enterprise, and the two-day convention held on March 20 and 21 at Wichita by the Kansas members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America gave him just the opportunity he wanted to make a practical demonstration of his theory.

In conjunction with his chief publicity expert, L. J. Scott, Mr. Pearson opened up temporary publishing headquarters at Wichita, from which point of vantage they issued "extras" of the house organ, "The Clansman," dealing with convention news, the transaction of business by the committees, and items of general interest to the visitors.

The Big Four quarters, in response to an invitation printed in the "extras," were continually thronged by exhibitors who found the publication offices a handy place to smoke, lounge and conduct friendly arguments.

It was Liberty Hall in every sense of the phrase, for the editors of the V-S-L-E weekly had taken care to advertise in large black-face type the fact that visitors were requested to make themselves perfectly at home and would not be approached with business suggestions.

The special issues were in great demand, supplying as they did information regarding the business schedule of the convention, bright and breezy personals and timely editorial comment.

ONE NEW EXCHANGE A WEEK IN "FILM ROW," SAN FRANCISCO

Film Row, San Francisco, as the lower end of Golden Gate avenue is now known, is growing at a rapid rate, an average of one new exchange a week having been made during the past month. The General Film Company is now in its new home just above Leavenworth street, where an entire one-story fireproof building was erected especially for it.

The recently organized Peerless Film Service, Inc., in which E. H. Emmick is interested, has taken space at the corner of Golden Gate avenue and Jones street, and is handling a number of famous Griffith productions. The International Film Service, Inc., has opened for business at 280 Golden Gate avenue, and George Kleine attractions has taken over a store at 288 Golden Gate avenue, where offices will be opened shortly.

Several other film exchanges and supply houses are planning to secure quarters on Film Row, where fourteen firms in this business have already located. During the recent investigations by the fire department of conditions in the film exchanges, there was considerable talk of the erection of a large fireproof structure to house all of the film exchanges in the city, but nothing has been heard of the project of late.

MORRIS JOINS CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG COMPANY

Samuel E. Morris, for the last eight months manager of the Cleveland branch of the World and Equitable Film corporations, leaves Cleveland to become associated with the new Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation.

Before allying himself with the exchange business, Mr. Morris was a well-known Cleveland exhibitor. He was owner of the Crown Theatre and part owner of the Home. He still retains an interest in the Home. Mr. Morris was the first president of the Cleveland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. He held that position during the three years of the greatest activity of the branch.

FIFTY-SIX REELS A WEEK, INCLUDING A 5-REEL FEATURE, OFFERED FOR $50 A WEEK

Letters announcing a service of fifty-six reels per week, consisting of one five-reel feature and three reels of one and two-reel subjects, have been sent out by a Los Angeles exchange with a quotation of fifty dollars per week for this service.

It is whispered about that this cut in price will bring about a general price cutting contest which will in all probability be participated in by several of the exchanges. This is said to be the lowest price ever quoted by a Los Angeles exchange for service of a commercial run nature, and reflects the general condition of renting business there more strikingly than anything else.

LEARS VISITS KANSAS CITY EXCHANGES

A recent visitor to the Kansas City exchanges was Samuel Lears, of the Lears Theatre Supply Company, St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Lears stopped for some time at the office of the Western Film and Supply Company, meeting his old friend, "Pat" Hall. The St. Louis man was on his way to the Republican state convention at Excelsior Springs, where he went as a delegate from the St. Louis district.

H. A. Roubert, traveling representative of the Aurora Film Plays Corporation, was another caller at this office. Mr. Roubert is endeavoring to sell the state rights for "The Waif," and was making a special showing in Kansas City. A. J. Braden, a traveling exhibitor of Longmont, Colo., also stopped at Hall's office during the week.

"BILLY SUNDAY" FILMS POPULAR IN KANSAS CITY

According to P. J. Hall, manager of the Western Film and Supply Company, the ministers of Kansas City are taking to the "Billy Sunday" films. The famous evangelist will be there on April 29 for a stay of some time, and the city is much interested in his career. The Central Church, Kansas City, Kans., and the Hyde Park Christian, Kansas City, Mo., one of the best known churches in that city, have contracted for the showing of this picture.

The Sapphire Theatre is running the film on its daily program, and it is drawing very large crowds. It is probable that other churches will show the picture, as the interest in Billy Sunday is on the increase every day.

ELEVEN THEATRES IN LOEW AND PROCTOR CIRCUITS WILL USE TRIANGLE PICTURES

The Triangle Film Corporation reports that its New York branch has just ended a record-breaking week for the increase of its service in the distribution of the picture features of Griffith, Ince and Sennett Alfred Weiss, district manager, and S. Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York branch, were the collaborators.

Each obtained five additional theatres on circuits which have already tested the drawing powers of Triangle. Weiss got five on the Marcus Loew chain and Eckman gets credit for increasing the Proctor-Triangle theatres to eleven.

Loew will put the new service into his Broadway house, the New York, at Forty-fifth street; also the Eighty-sixth Street, Circle and Murray Hill theatres; the Lexington avenue, New Rochelle, and the Globe in Boston. Proctor, who has been using Triangle at the Fifth avenue, Twenty-third street and One hundred and twenty-fifth street theatres in New York, and in his houses in Plainfield and Elizabeth, N. J., adds two theatres in Troy, the New and the Griswold, the Leland in Albany and Proctor's Theatre in Mt. Vernon and Yonkers.

Fox, Keith and Poli have been using Triangle for several months. Mr. Eckman is now serving three hundred theatres from the New York exchange and plans a great spring drive that will increase this number to half a thousand at least.

CLARK GOES TO CALIFORNIA MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

Ralph Clark, for the past year and a half manager of the San Francisco office of the World Film Corporation, one of the pioneer concerns on Golden Gate avenue, has resigned to take up work with the California Motion Picture Corporation, with headquarters for the present at the San Rafael studio of this concern.

The latest production of this company, "The Unwritten Law," will be shown shortly at the Alcazar Theatre in San Francisco city, it being the plan to present all of its productions in that city for the premier run.

"BILLY SUNDAY HAND" HAS FINGERS OUT FOR BUSINESS ON ALL WEEK DAYS

Stanley W. Hand, well known to New England exhibitors, has been appointed assistant sales manager of the World Film Corporation, and is hard at work at the executive offices, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Mr. Hand went to Boston a year ago as a salesman for the World Film Corporation, and was known as "Billy Sunday Hand" amongst the exhibitors, because of his frank and "on the level" dealings. He succeeded P. B. Elliott as manager of the Boston branch in June, 1915, and became one of the Film Colony at Marblehead, Mass.

In November he was transferred to the New York Exchange, and on April 3 appointed to his new position as assistant to Mr. Felix F. Feist.

New Laws And Court Decisions

This department is designed to keep the industry informed of all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and all events involving any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the country

MONEY PAID TO CENSORS IN CANADA TWICE SUM NECESSARY FOR UP-KEEP OF DEPARTMENT

AN enlightening set of figures, covering the activities of the British Columbia censor during the year 1915, has recently been made public by Hon. W. J. Bowser, attorney-general for the province. The report just given out shows that during the year approximately 6,800 reels of film were examined by the censor's department, and that out of this number a total of 800 full reels were rejected, or 11.76 per cent. of the number submitted.

Were it not for the fact that following the passing of "The Spoilers" by the attorney-general, on appeal from the censor's ruling condemning the picture, orders were given to cease the indiscriminate rejection of pictures on flimsy excuses, the total of rejected reels would undoubtedly be even higher.

Following is the official tabulation of rejections, with the reasons therefor:

"Generally immoral, 124 reels; infidelity, 116; seduction, 95; depiction of harlots, 72; offensive to religious orders, 37; excessive crime and gun play, 32; against public policy, 36; gruesome, 27; indecent vulgarity, 26; white slavery, 24; anti-British, 23; unnecessary display of U. S. flags, 22; glorifying criminals, 23; dive scenes, 20; unwholesome and evil suggestions, 16; cohabitation and concubinage, 14; slandering Allies in war, 16; illegitimacy, 13; burlesque of clergy, 13; films manufactured in Germany and Austria, 12; excessive drunkenness, 9; bad example to children, 5; ridicule of temperance movement, 4; nauseous snake films, 3; excessive gambling, 2; lewdness of characters, 2; insanity for comedy purposes, 2; general depravity and viciousness, 16."

Although no exact record is kept of the number of cuts made in films which were passed, these excisions run up into the thousands, the report for the year previous stating that several thousands of excisions were made.

The financial statement of the department is also of interest, and brings out the fact that the license fees and charges for censoring are almost twice as great as are necessary to make the department self-sustaining. The censor's office also has charge of the inspection of motion picture theatres in the province, as well as the licensing of the theatres, exchanges, operators, and all other revenue producing sources of the industry.

Receipts for the year, consisting of $6,794.50 for the censoring of films, $7,496.45 for theatre licenses, $2,800 for exchange licenses, and various smaller items, total $18,278.10. Expenses of the department, consisting of $8,540 for salaries, $800 for traveling expenses, and $300 for office maintenance and incidentals, total $9,640, making the net profit from the moving picture industry for one year $8,638.10.

SUNDAY OPENING PLAN IN FORT WORTH RATIFIED

The proposed city ordinance to permit moving pictures to show on Sunday at Fort Worth, Texas, was ratified in that city when a special election was held; the vote for Sunday shows was 3,811 and 2,818 against, a majority of 993 for Sunday shows.

The City Council on April 4 declared the ordinance operative, and Sunday shows in Fort Worth, Texas, are legal as far as the city laws are concerned, but previous court of appeals decisions against Sunday shows will probably prove the election illegal and the ordinance inoperative. The church people and citizens who oppose the Sunday films declare that they are not beaten, and that every effort will be put forth by the law-abiding and Sabbath-observing citizens to prevent the showing of moving pictures in Fort Worth, Texas, on Sunday.

ONE CENT TAX ON EACH ADMISSION FACES ALBERTA

Word has been received at Calgary that the Alberta legislature, now in session, is considering legislation providing for a tax on theatre tickets similar to that already in force in Ontario and Quebec, and that the measure will be approved at the present session.

A tax of one cent will be levied on each theatre ticket, irrespective of its value, and it is provided that the tax must be paid by the person using the ticket. It was originally intended to impose this burden on the exhibitors, but it was shown that this would be an injustice, and the former plan was then decided upon.

The required stamps will be sold at the box offices of theatres, and will be affixed by the purchaser before presenting the tickets for admission.

The law is now being put into shape, and will be in force within a very short time.

SUNDAY PICTURES BARRED IN COLLEGE TOWN

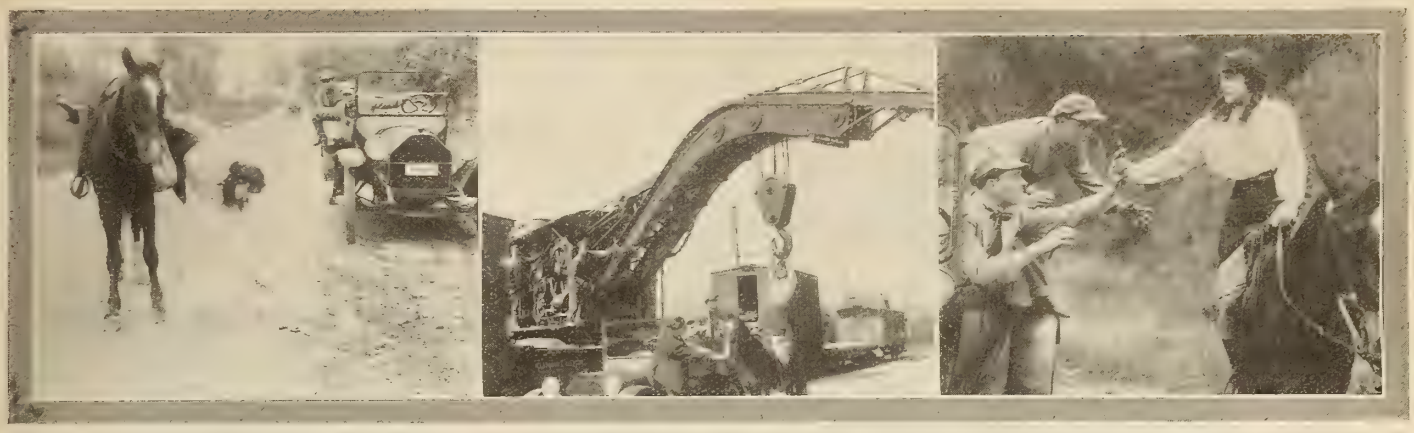
Mayor Wendell D. Rockwood, of Cambridge, Mass., just over the Charles River from Boston, has decreed that there shall be no more Sunday films in Cambridge. He has sent notices to this effect to the various theatres of the city. He said that no Sunday permits would be issued under any circumstances. While Sunday shows have been allowed in Cambridge for a long time, there have always been protests against them, and recently the opposition to them gathered such force that the mayor granted a hearing on the question.

It developed at the hearing that the objections came mostly from clergymen and on religious grounds. Most of the picture houses in Cambridge are of high class. It is generally thought that Sunday pictures will not be barred long.

CITY CAN'T EXPECT MUCH SYMPATHY FROM EXHIBITORS

Now that the municipal auditorium of Oakland, Cal., is completed, following serious charges of incompetence and wasting of public funds, it is being conducted as a competitive institution, competing with other theatres in a business way.

At the opening event a lady suffered an injury and has been awarded a judgment for damages, the judge ruling that the city, having seen fit to enter the amusement field, must share responsibility the same as any other theatre. The Auditorium, designed to cost $500,000, has cost over $1,000,000, and is now being used regularly for theatrical purposes. It has a seating capacity of over 10,000, which makes it a serious competitor for regular moving picture and other theatres.



ORDINANCE AFFECTS 300 CAPACITY THEATRES IN TULARE, CAL.

A new building ordinance has been adopted at Tulare, Cal., and a section has been added regulating theatres and public buildings with a capacity of more than three hundred persons.

It is provided that there shall be proper exits and that the doors shall be unlocked when the building is occupied.

CIVIC PURITANS WILL SCORN MONEY AND CENSOR FOR "HONOR"

Benton Harbor, Mich., has a new ordinance authorizing the mayor to appoint three citizens, composing a censorship board, to serve without pay, whose duty it shall be to censor film.

SCENES FROM "THE TRAIL OF DANGER," EPISODE OF "THE HAZARDS OF HELEN," KALEM RAILROAD SERIAL, WITH HELEN GIBSON

MABEL NORMAND LEAVES EAST TO JOIN INCE-TRIANGLE FORCES

Mabel Normand, "The Keystone Girl," left New York last week for the Ince studios in California after her two appearances with Roscoe Arbuckle in the eastern made Triangle farces, "He Did and He Didn't" and "The Bright Lights." The last coupon on about three yards of ticket read: "Good for One Passage from Los Angeles to Culver City." This is significant in that it shows that Miss Normand is really to achieve her ambition and appear as a star in light comedy dramas. Teddy Sampson, wife of Ford Sterling, went with her, probably to rejoin the Griffith players. She last appeared with Helen Ware in the Fine Arts feature, "Cross Currents."

"More Plots and Fewer Pies" is Mabel Normand's slogan from now on. She believes she is just as good a prospect for the five-reel comedies as William Collier, who made his film debut at the Mack Sennett studios. Ince will find that he has an ambitious worker on his hands when she presents herself for rehearsals.

Complete details regarding her first appearance in her new sphere will be forthcoming as soon as she and Thomas H. Ince have had a few conferences.

ALBERT MORRISON, "LEGIT" ACTOR, IN CAST OF "WOMAN WHO DARED"

With the release of the film dramatization of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's "The Woman Who Dared," now being produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation at San Rafael, Cal., another actor of long standing on the legitimate stage will make his debut upon the screen.

Joining Andrew Robson and William Pike in their support of Beatriz Michelena in this production is Albert Morrison. Both Robson and Pike are already well established with picture fans. Andrew Robson has supported Miss Michelena in every one of her screen productions, and William Pike played opposite her in both "Salvation Nell" and "The Unwritten Law." Morrison, however, has never before acted before the camera.

In "The Woman Who Dared" Morrison plays the part of an Italian nobleman, who is an aspirant for the hand of The Woman, played by Beatriz Michelena. He has for a rival a young American, impersonated by William Pike.

New Orleans Members of Industry Organize

Exhibitors, Exchange and Supply Men Form the Southern Motion Picture Trade Association and Plan Exposition for City During Mardi Gras Week in 1917

Special to Motion Picture News.

New Orleans, La., April 15.

THE Southern Motion Pictures Trades Association was formally organized at a luncheon meeting of exhibitors, exchange and supply men in the main dining room of the DeSoto Hotel April 6.

C. A. Walker, editor of The Motion Picture Journal, who is principally responsible for the exposition idea for New Orleans in 1917, arrived in New Orleans in the morning from Atlanta, and was the principal speaker at the meeting. Introduced as originator of the exposition idea, Mr. Walker referred to the similar event staged in Dallas, Texas, two years ago, and the one which was held in Atlanta last week. In Dallas, Mr. Walker states, there were about two hundred exhibitors present, and in Atlanta about the same number; but that as each of these affairs had been scheduled a short time after the idea was started, neither was the success that an exposition in New Orleans next year would be if the preliminary plans are laid now.

He said that in Atlanta the secretary had made every endeavor to get motion picture stars at the ball on the final night; but had failed because the time was too short to secure the co-operation of the producing company. He then staged a beauty contest, and this affair was attended by more than 3,000 persons.

It was definitely settled that an exposition to take in all branches of the trade will be held in New Orleans in February, 1917, during Mardi Gras week, when the city is thronged with thousands of Carnival visitors.

The luncheon meeting was called by Karl A. Bugbee, Metro manager in New Orleans. Mr. Bugbee called on exchange managers, exhibitors and newspaper men to get their views regarding the undertaking, and, on a motion by J. Eugene Pearce, a permanent organization under the name of the Motion Picture Trades Association was effected. Speakers included Al G. Shear, Universal manager; H. G. Morrow, General manager; S. T Stephens, Mutual manager; Ross Hardenbrook, World manager; Raoul Junet, Pathé manager; Nat Ehrlich, Triangle manager; L. J. Hennessey, of the New Orleans Association of Commerce; R. S. Pritchard, New Orleans Item, and N. S. Thatcher, New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Mr. Pearce was elected president and Mr. Ehrlich temporary secretary. Al Shear and Karl Bugbee were named members of the executive board, and conferred with the president after the meeting on plans for furthering the exposition, and sketched out details.

Various committees are to be named within a week. Those present at the meeting included Al. G. Shear, Universal; H. G. Moreau, General; F. W. Barron, Fox; K. A. Bugbee, Metro; S. T. Stephens, Mutual; Ross Hardenbrook, World; R. King Evans, V-L-S-E; Howard Gale, Kleine-Edison; Raoul Junet, Pathé; H. F. Wilkes, Paramount; L. C. Scott, Texas Paramount; Nat Ehrlich, Triangle; J. Eugene Pearce, L. J. Hennessey, J. C. Raglan, R. S. Pritchard, N. S. Thatcher, and C. A. Walker.

MARYLAND CENSOR BILL SHOWN TO BE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Special to Motion Picture News.

Baltimore, April 15.

A strong delegation of motion picture exhibitors went to Annapolis, Maryland, on Monday, April 10, to urge Governor Harrington not to sign the motion picture censorship bill passed by both houses of the Maryland legislature. The members of the delegation got little encouragement from Governor Harrington, but it was pointed out to the State executive that the bill, in its present form, was unconstitutional.

This point was taken on a recent ruling of the Supreme Court, that States revenues cannot be divided as provided for in the Maryland censorship bill. It is now possible for the bill to remain unsigned on this technicality.

Another feature brought up was the fact that as no film is made in Maryland, the censorship question is one for the Interstate Commerce Commission to act upon. Local picture interests are building their hopes on these features for defeating the bill. There is still a chance to avoid censorship in Maryland, it is confidently believed.

Film News From Foreign Parts

Australian Made Films Seldom Go Out of Country

Special to Motion Picture News.

Sydney, N. S. W., March 15.

SPEAKING to Alfred Rolfe last week about the difficulties of producing pictures in Australia, he remarked that one of the chief setbacks was the impossibility of securing a foreign market. "Pictures made in this country," he said, "rarely, if ever, find their way to the English and American fields. Four prints are sufficient to supply the needs of local exhibitors, sometimes even less than that." Mr. Rolfe said that in his opinion the only chance, at present for Australian pictures to compete with the foreign and English trade is for a well established firm in either England or America, to establish a branch here and release through the regular programs in the forementioned countries."

Mr. Rolfe has had twenty-five years' experience on the stage and pictures and in the latter profession has produced some very worthy subjects. Four or five years ago he was associated with the Australian Photoplay Company, and with him in this firm were Stanley Walpole and Ethel Phillips, who have both been successful in the United States. Alfred Rolfe was with Fraser Films previous to joining the Australasian Films, Ltd. He is now working on a series of industrial films for this concern, and shortly leaves for the "outback" to take necessary scenes. The pictures will show the industries of the Commonwealth, such as wool-growing, stock-raising, timber-getting and mining.

Speaking of the Triangle Films Mr. Rolfe said that in his opinion they were the "acme of perfection."

The authorities in Hobart, Tasmania, have decided to allow a continuance of Sunday exhibitions provided that suitable subjects are screened.

Triangle Goes Well

The publicity matter distributed by the Australasian Films, Ltd., in connection with the Triangle Pictures will take a lot to beat, for it is perhaps the best of its kind yet handled by any film concern in this city.

Several scenes of the crowds attending the "Triangle Trade Show" last week at the Palace theatre were "shot" by the Australian Gazette cameraman.

An important announcement came from the Fraser Film Exchange last week, stating that it has secured the rights for Australia to Universal Red Feather Features and Bluebird Photoplays. There has been no definite announcement as to the first subjects so far.

The smaller subjects of the Universal Company are handled jointly between the Fraser Exchange, and Co-Operative. The latter firm also controls Metro and World Feature Films in this state. Fraser's are at present erecting a new picture theatre in George street, Haymarket, which is to hold 2,000 and it is probable that Universal Red Feather Features will make their initial bow at the opening of this new house.

On Thursday and Friday last, the 9th and 10th inst., Australasian Films, Ltd., gave an introductory screening of the long-awaited Triangle productions at the Palace theatre. Many members of the trade were present and after a short speech by George Portus, on Thursday afternoon, the pictures were screened. Thursday's program consisted of "The Coward" and "Crooked to the End," Kay-Bee and Keystone productions, respectively. The Keystone was received like a drama, the audience groaning when the "villains" were successful and clapping the hero. But everyone in the whole audience roared with laughter at the wonderful comedy stunts provided in the last five minutes of the Sennett creation.

"The Coward" was received very well, and proved a decided contrast to the uproariously funny Keystone which preceded it. Several members of the audience, who probably have brothers, fathers or relations at the front, burst into tears, so wonderfully realistic was the production. "The Golden Claw" and "The Submarine Pirate" provided Friday's entertainment. "The Golden Claw" is a high-class production, but I think the majority of the audience liked the first Ince picture better. "The Submarine Pirate" was wonderful—a real comedy. The mechanical effects—like in "Crooked to the End"—were extraordinary.

If the future Triangle productions maintain the standard of the first four screened at the trade showing, their welcome in this and other cities of the Commonwealth is at once assured.

The historic Lyceum theatre has been remodelled, and renamed the Triangle Playhouse. The first public showing will be conducted here on Saturday next, the 18th inst.

The Fox Film Corporation (Australasia) Ltd., are now comfortably located in their offices at 194 Pitt street, Sydney. Judging by the genial expression of Lieut. Jim Anderson's face, the firm seems to be doing good business. "Carmen" and "The Kreutzer Sonata" have been enthusiastically received at the Empire theatre, Katoomba, N. S. W. This town is the holiday resort of wealthy Sydneyites, and is situated among fine scenery in the famous Blue Mountains. The summer population often exceeds the twenty thousand mark, so the Fox productions should always be sure of a hearty welcome.

Raymond Longford and a company of artists sail shortly for New Zealand, where they will take such scenes as are required for their new spectacular production.

The management of the Theater Royal (J. C. Williamson, Ltd.) gave to their patrons at the matinee last Saturday one of the longest picture programs yet submitted to the public, the two star features being "The Nigger" and "The Thief," both Fox features. The former has been cut down a great deal, and as it now stands, contains nothing likely to be offensive. Farnum's acting again won applause from the spectators. "The Thief" was a very poor picture judging by the standard of previous Fox pictures. "The Nigger" was rendered more attractive by the orchestra, under the direction of Gustave Slappofski, giving some fine plantation melodies.

The program at this theatre next week will be Betty Nansen in "Should a Mother Tell," and "The Devil's Daughter," with Theda Bara.

George Mathieson, business manager of the Royal, has just returned from a flying trip from Melbourne, in the company's interests.

Making War Cartoons

Harry Julius, cartoonist for various local papers, and also for the Australasian Gazette, is at present working on a lengthy cartoon, dealing with the war, for Australasian Films, Ltd. This will be the first picture of its kind made in Australia.

Barrington Miller, general manager of Union Theatres, Ltd., has secured a large block of land in a prominent position in Sydney, and intends to build a new theatre shortly. Negotiations are also under way for the securing of sites in Melbourne, Adelaide and Perth.

Hal. H. Carleton.

EXPECT 15 CENT PRICE LEVEL IN MARITIME PROVINCES

Special to Motion Picture News.

St. John, N. B., April 15.

Conditions have been changing rapidly in the amusement world of the end of the country, with the result that whereas the universal price of admission to film houses has been until lately five cents, it is now, except in four cases, fifteen cents.

It is strange that these four cases of backward policy, or holding to old customs, should be in St. John itself. One of these houses is the Unique, now being reopened, and it is expected that there will be only three left of the Old Guard by next month in the whole of the three Maritime Provinces.

AINSWORTH, VILLAIN IN "MARY PAGE," IS "YANKO-SPANKO" WAR VETERAN

Sydney Ainsworth, the villain in "The Strange Case of Mary Page," Essanay's fifteen episode series, is a native of England, having come to this country when he was three years of age. He was educated in the public schools of Madison, Wis., served in the Spanish War, and then went

JESSIE ARNOLD, BACK FROM AUSTRALIAN TOUR, WITH "U"

Jessie Arnold, who has just returned to America from an extended theatrical tour through Australia, has been added to the stock company of the Universal. Miss Arnold has had a number of years' experience on the legitimate stage, and for a time played with William Collier and other notables.

"God's Country" Filmed 9,000 Feet Above Sea Level

Vitagraph Eight Reeler Is Photographed in Deep Snows of Bear Valley in Mountains of Southern California—William Duncan, George Holt and Nell Shipman in Cast

"SNOW STUFF" IN "GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN," SPECIAL VITAGRAPH BLUE RIBBON, TO BE RELEASED THROUGH V-L-S-E

"GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN" is a special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, an eight-reeler which was photographed in the deep snows of Great Bear Valley up in the San Bernardino Mountains of southern California.

Bear Valley is 9,000 feet above sea level, and is reached by a dog road over which Rollin S. Sturgeon and his Vitagraph players journeyed to camp for six months while filming this photoplay.

William Duncan, George Holt and Nell Shipman are the principals who enact the drama of a girl, whose mother is overpowered by a villain and gives birth to a child in the absence of her husband. The daughter comes bravely to the front to assume the responsibility of the motherhood. To preserve her own honor the girl, just before her father returns, writes him that she is going to the northwoods to meet her "husband." The ruse works well, for a young man drifting down stream on a homeward journey from the wilds, beaches his canoe near the girl's forest shelter, and falls in love with her.

She prevails upon him through his great love for her to pose as her husband, and they go back home together to protect the good name of the mother. A marriage ceremony is performed, but they live in separate rooms in a frontier home until finally the baby dies and the villain, who all the while is trying to get possession of the girl, is devoured by a pack of sledge dogs who trail him down after a sensational battle in which the arch conspirator and his fellow-outlaws in "Devil's Nest" are vanquished, and the girl, who had been made captive, is freed by her sweetheart.

Thereafter, in the glow of the burning rendezvous, the hero takes the girl to his heart as wife in fact as well as name, for in the passing ordeals the violation of the mother becomes known to him and his bride becomes free to claim his love.

"Gilded Spider" from Bluebird on May 8

Scenario Is Based on Ida Park's Story and Is Vehicle for Louise Lovely and Lon Chaney —Joseph De Grasse Directed

THE Bluebird release for May 8 will be "The Gilded Spider," based on Ida May Park's story and scenario, with Louise Lovely in the star part and Lon Chaney her leading man. Joseph De Grasse made the production.

Lon Chaney carries the story through a one-man vendetta that starts in Italy and finishes in New York. There are two separate kidnapping scenes, one ending in the suicide of an Italian girl, who jumps from an American millionaire's yacht into the Mediterranean, and the other constituting reprisal for the deed, accomplished after years of waiting.

There are scenes depicting the private roof garden of a wealthy New Yorker, where revelry ends in the suicidal leap of the vengeful Italian from the roof to death on the pavements far below. An exciting automobile chase forms the basis for another sensation, and there are minor incidents that have been designed to furnish "thrills."

Supporting Miss Lovely and Lon Chaney will be Lule Warrenton, Marjorie Ellison, Gilmore Hammond, Jay Belasco and Hayward Mack.

In the projection room of Bluebird Photoplays during the past week a lady of the name of Isabel has been reducing. She has not rolled upon the floor, nor has she practiced with dumb-bells or avoided the Automat in pursuance of a prescribed course in dieting.

As a matter of fact, be it said Isabel was not too fat, as some plump ladies consider themselves. Isabel was too long by three reels to fit on the Bluebird program.

Therefore she was constructed in eight lengths, with a sensation every 200 feet. Then came the process of reducing. With shears, axe, paste pot, pencil, hammer and file the Bluebird editors got after the lengthy Isabel, and after several days' work reduced her to five reels, and still there remained a sensation every 200 feet.

Florence Lawrence will enter the list of Bluebird stars late in May as the "Elusive" one.

FORD PUBLICATION RUN BY SACKER AND WILTERMOOD

The Photoplayers Weekly, a four-page newspaper published in Los Angeles and owned by Francis Ford, formerly of the Universal Company, is in the future to be edited and published by Frank M. Wiltermood, scenario writer of the Universal staff, and Jack Sacker, actor at the film city. Both parties will continue their work for the Universal and take care of their newspaper business in the evening.

Many Brooklyn Houses Send Delegates to Meeting

Speaker at Second Assemblage of Newly Organized Association Urges Need of Organization for Effective Defense Against Adverse Legislation

PRACTICALLY every theatre in Brooklyn was represented at the second meeting of the newly formed Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors' of Brooklyn, held at the Regent theatre, Fulton street and Bedford avenue, last Monday night. For enthusiasm and good will this meeting undoubtedly surpassed any other gathering of similar character, and it was afterward unanimously agreed that the three hundred theatres of Brooklyn would be well represented amongst organized exhibitors.

Temporary Chairman William Brandt appointed a committee of five, consisting of Mr. Manheimer, Park theatre; Mr. Loeb, Sumner; Mr. Levine, Regent; Mr. Glyn, Alhambra, and Mr. Title, T. N. F. theatre, to confer with Lee Ochs, chairman of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, and a committee of five, regarding the co-operation of the new organization with that of the state.

M. Carpenter, secretary of The New York Automobile Association, was the principal speaker of the evening, and in urging a strong and centralized organization, said:

"The motion picture exhibitor is almost in a similar position as were the automobile dealers before we formed our association. We were the target of every lawmakers' attack, until we got together and told these gentlemen that we had sufficient laws to be regulated under. Our organized strength made an indelible impression. We found it worked so well that we decided to make a permanent body of our organization for our mutual protection.

"You have a very similar business. You are practically dealers in motion pictures, jobbing the manufacturers' merchandise at a certain price of admission, just as we job the manufacturers machines at certain prices. You should take advantage of the precedent we have established and be in the same position as we are.

"If legislation affecting our industry is offered we are consulted, and there is no reason why an industry as large and vital to the welfare of the community as yours should not be in the same position. Of course our manufacturers have their own organization also, and upon occasion when adverse legislation is presented, we stand shoulder to shoulder and fight the common enemy."

Mr. Carpenter's remarks made a deep impression, and upon conclusion of his speech he was loudly applauded and presented with a rising vote of thanks. Several exhibitors immediately paid their initiation fees and joined the Brooklyn Association.

Discussion regarding existing bills pending at Albany before the legislature was then held, some of the exhibitors realizing for the first time that legislation had been introduced that was very vital to their welfare.

An important subject brought up was the exhibition of films in public schools and churches in direct competition with the theatres, but on account of the lateness of the hour the matter was laid on the table as unfinished business, discussion and action to be resumed at the next meeting, to be held Monday, April 10, at the Sumner Theatre, Sumner and Gates avenues. All exhibitors of Brooklyn were cordially invited to attend.

"Work and Some Imagination Make Good Cartoons"

Sullivan, Creator of Black-faced "Sambo" Whose "Sammie Jonsin" Comics for Universal Attracted Favorable Comment, Gets Results by Such Simple Means

PAT SULLIVAN, cartoonist, creator of black-faced "Sambo," has been fashioning a number of animated cartoons for Universal which have brought forth much favorable comment. All of these subjects, which are in split reel form, have to do with the adventures of "Sammie Jonsin," the same character which was made to perform in still pictures for the McClure Syndicate before Mr. Sullivan entered the picture field.

Mr. Sullivan is from Australia. He has been in America for six years, and besides drawing "Sambo" for McClure's Syndicate, he did considerable work for the New York Evening World. Mr. Sullivan, however, does not attribute his success in motion picture work to his syndicate and newspaper experience. He believes that the art of drawing for reproduction on the screen is totally apart from that of the older profession, and is an individual art.

He has no patents or any secret method of fashioning his comic cartoons. Plenty of hard work, some imagination—those are the essential requisites for film cartooning, to his way of thinking.

Prominent on Mr. Sullivan's staff is Arthur T. Crichton, a cartoonist formerly employed on several metropolitan dailies throughout the country, including the Boston Herald, the Philadelphia North American and the Philadelphia Record, where he remained for five years. Mr. Crichton is doing original work besides assisting on the Sambo pictures.

Mildred Walker is another artist on the Sullivan staff. She has just entered this field, and Mr. Sullivan is exploiting her work, the first of which will shortly appear. She is believed to be the only woman artist doing cartoon work for the pictures.

Wrecking Train Shown at Fair Used in a "Hazard"

Baldwin Locomotive Company Exhibit at San Francisco Helps to Put Thrills in "The Trail of Danger"—Train on View at Kalem Station

CONSIDERABLE negotiations and pulling of wires with railway officials higher up was necessary before Kalem succeeded in securing permission to use the Salt Lake Railway's prized wreck train equipment in a "Hazard of Helen." The equipment is probably the latest in use on an American road, and as part of the Baldwin Locomotive Company's exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition attracted considerable attention.

The use of the wrecking train was found necessary for the production of Kalem's forthcoming "Hazard," "The Trail of Danger." In this episode a series of thrilling feats lead up to the climax, which finds Helen on horseback and pursued by conspirators in an automobile.

Her frantic cries for help are heard by the workmen on the wreck train, who, seeing that there is no time to stop the speeding train, swing the huge crane of the wrecking car out over the road beside the tracks. Helen quickly grasps the chain dangling from the crane and is swung clear of the saddle and through the air to the car just as the pursuing automobile strikes her mount.

The monster wrecking train was one of the sights of the week at the Kalem "Hazards of Helen" studio, which has been designated an official station on the Salt Lake road. The station is completely equipped in every respect for its double use as a real station and as a motion picture studio with all conveniences.

Coincident with the official sanction to name "Kalem" a stopping place in the Salt Lake route-books Helen Gibson was named stationmaster. Helen declares that so far she has found the position merely honorary, but that she is willing to work any time the railroad adds a salary to the title.

BULLOCK MAKES PLEA FOR LEAGUE AND BOARD OF TRADE UNITY

Cleveland, Ohio, March 28.
William A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.
My dear Mr. Johnston:

I heartily concur in all that friend Rembusch said in Motion Picture News, issue of April 1, under the caption, "Let Us Have Unity."

For six years we have been in poor shape as a national exhibitors' organization, but this year bids fair to bring grand results and while we are perfecting and strengthening our own organization, we should work hand in hand with the Motion Picture Board of Trade in everything pertaining to our mutual benefit.

I have nothing to add to Rembusch's fine article. He covered the subject thoroughly. LET US HAVE UNITY!

SAM BULLOCK.

MARGUERITE COURTOT LEADS BALL IN JACKSONVILLE

Myers and Rosemary Theby at Work on Vims in South

Actor, Who Gained Reputation as Producer of Successful Comedies, Will Direct a Weekly Series for General Program—Studio Delegate Meets Stars on Arrival in Jacksonville

HARRY C. MYERS and Rosemary Theby arrived last Monday at the Vim Comedy studios in Jacksonville, Fla., and started work immediately on the first of a weekly series of "refined" comedies to be released under the Vim brand on the General program. Mr. Myers, who has an enviable reputation as a producer of high-class comedies, is directing.

The famous comedy team last week signed a two-year contract with Mark Dintenfass, of the Vim organization, under whose management they worked during their long regime as Universal stars. Speaking of his plans, Mr. Dintenfass said:

"We have always been proud of the Vim program, but the weekly release of a refined comedy, featuring two such popular artists as Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, is a matter for congratulation. Both Mr. Burstein and I consider that we have secured the biggest drawing card in the comedy field, and the biggest bargain, too. This team has achieved a deserved popularity during several years of co-starring, and Mr. Myers is a wonderful director, an artist in every way. Although their contract calls for salaries of four figures, we consider them cheap at the price."

HARRY MYERS — ROSEMARY THEBY

Mr. Myers came into pictures seven years ago, after a successful career on the stage. He joined the Lubin company and was quickly recognized as a screen comedian of the first water, although he was at first cast for drama. During his long association with the Lubin forces he began playing with Rosemary Theby, and the co-partnership has lasted for four years.

On their arrival in Jacksonville, the co-stars were met by a delegation from the Vim studios, headed by Louis Burstein, in personal charge of direction; "Babe" Hardy and Billy Ruge, of "Plump and Runt"; Elsie MacLeod, Bob Burns and Walter Stull, of "Pokes and Jabbs." It was a real welcome, for the majority of the Vim players are old stage companions of Mr. Myers and Miss Theby, having played with them in stock before coming into picture work.

For his first release, shortly to be announced, Mr. Myers has chosen a story which offers opportunity for some elaborate effects as well as sparkling comedy. He practically owned the outdoor stage last week, and this gives some idea of the scope of the work; for the stage comprises 35,000 square feet under cloth diffusers.

No date has yet been set for the first release, but advance bookings have already been received from many parts of the country, especially from the Far West.

Kaufman to Direct Pauline Frederick for Famous

First Production Under His Hand for Company Will Be "The Great Gamble," an Adaptation of an E. Phillips Oppenheim Story—Director Was Associated with Frohman

AN addition has been made to the producing staff of the Famous Players Film Company in the person of Joseph Kaufman, who has severed his connection with the Lubin Company, for which he has been directing three, four and five-reel productions for the last three years. His last film made under the banner of the Philadelphia concern was "Dollars and the Woman."

Mr. Kaufman's first production for the Famous Players will be an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's story, "The Great Gamble," in which Pauline Frederick is to be starred. Robert G. Vignola, who has presided over Miss Frederick's last three film appearances for the Paramount Program—"The Spider," "Audrey" and "The Moment Before"—is to direct the film debut of a celebrated Broadway star who is soon to make her first appearance on the screen in a Famous Players production.

JOSEPH KAUFMAN

Through Mr. Kaufman's connection with the Famous Players he will again come in official contact with Hugh Ford, as the former appeared on the stage under the direction of Mr. Ford over ten years ago. A native of Washington and a graduate of Georgetown University, Mr. Kaufman first appeared on the stage in a big stock company in the Capital City, and then played in stock in Denver, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit and New York City successively.

Mr. Kaufman spent seven years in association with Charles Frohman, during which time he was stage manager for Maude Adams, William Collier, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Virginia Harned, and acted as Marie Doro's first stage manager. During the latter part of his connection with Mr. Frohman he worked on productions in conjunction with the manager.

Joining Cohan and Harris, Mr. Kaufman played in "Brewster's Millions," "Wallingford," "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" and other successes before allying himself with Frederick Thompson, for whom he played the wireless operator in the famous drama, "Via Wireless," which scored such a hit at the Liberty Theatre, New York. He later starred in "Brewster's Millions."

After playing "The Country Boy" for a season under the management of H. B. Harris, Mr. Kaufman went to Philadelphia to act as co-director with Frank Reichner at the Little Theatre. It was here that he attracted the attention of Siegmund Lubin while playing a dope fiend. The film manufacturer was looking for someone to play the leading role in "The Drug Terror," and he found in Mr. Kaufman the answer to his problem. That was three years ago. After acting in films for a year, Mr. Kaufman took up the direction of feature productions, and has been engaged on that work ever since.

TWO BILLIE BURKE PICTURES STIR OHIO

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Cleveland, O., April 15.

Although the big exhibitors in Cleveland are still bidding against each other for first run on the new Billie Burke motion picture novel, bookings throughout northern Ohio are said to be particularly gratifying. Record prices are evident all along the line. Billie Burke's "Peggy" broke all records at the Metropolitan Theatre, Cleveland's best photoploy house.

Although several houses are competing for first run of "Gloria's Romance" in Cleveland, it is generaly expected that the Metropolitan Theatre will outbid all its rivals. The Cleveland Plain Dealer, the most influential paper in northern Ohio, will run "Gloria's Romance" in narrative form.

ALICE JOYCE, FORMER KALEM STAR, SOON BACK IN PICTURES

Alice Joyce, who achieved wide popularity during her long engagement with the Kalem Company, will return to the screen, it is announced. She is negotiating through her business manager, Joseph W. Farnham, of the Amalgamated Photo Play

Service, with several producers, and will shortly make known which company she will become affiliated with.

About a year ago Miss Joyce resigned from Kalem, and since then has been taking a rest at her country place in the Berkshires.

WASHINGTON, D. C., ENTERS ACTORS' FUND CAMPAIGN

The latest big community to enter the competition of cities in the mammoth Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America is Washington, D. C. An energetic committee has been organized in the National Capital to see that it does its share in raising the $500,000 for the endowment of the fund which the heads of the motion picture industry engaged to collect in fifteen wooks.

The chairman of the board of city commissioners is the honorary chairman of the campaign's Washington committee and Alfred Ferguson is the active chairman. Other members of the committee are J. H. Walraven, J. L. Yates and Fred Haskins.

Mr. Ferguson reports to Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the national executive committee of the campaign, that the proprietors of the Washington motion picture houses are all taking a lively interest in the movement.

Bill for Relief in Making Photoplay Copyrights

Amendment to Law Would Do Away with Practice of Submitting Two Copies of a Completed Reel to Comply with Provisions of Section 12 and Also Help Poster Situation

Special to Motion Picture News.

Washington, D. C., April 15.

A BILL has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Representative W. R. Oglesby of Yonkers, N. Y., to amend the present copyright law so that in certain cases it will not be necessary to file with the application for copyright the two copies of the copyrighted work as is now required.

Section 12, which is to be amended, provides "That after copyright has been secured by publication of the work with the notice of copyright as provided * * *, there shall be promptly deposited in the copyright office or in the mail addressed to the register of copyrights, Washington, District of Columbia, two complete copies of the best edition thereof then published * * *. No action or proceeding shall be maintained for infringement of copyright in any work until the provisions of this Act with respect to the deposit of copies and regisration of such work shall have been complied with."

Provided, however, that in the case of any work referred to in this section wherein copyright has been secured by publication of the work with notice of copyright, which by reason of its character, bulk, fragility, or because of dangerous ingredients cannot expediently be filed, the Register of Copyrights may determine that there shall be deposited, in lieu of two complete copies of such work, such identifying photographs or prints together with such written or printed description of the work as he shall find sufficient to identify it; and provided further, that in the case of motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays, whenever deposit has been made as required by the provisions of the Act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, and registration has been secured thereunder, such deposit and registration shall hereafter be held to be sufficient for all purposes, and shall exempt the copyright proprietor from the deposit of two complete copies of such photoplay or motion picture if it is later reproduced in copies for sale, and the provisions of the amendatory Act of August 24, 1912, are hereby made to apply to motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays that have been reproduced in copies for sale or otherwise published.

Under the provisions of Section 11 of the law it is necessary only to furnish one print taken from each scene or act where the work to be copyrighted consists of a motion picture photoplay. Notwithstanding this provision producers have apparently felt obliged to comply with the provisions of Section 12 and submit two copies of the complete reels. This has resulted in producing an awkward situation at the copyright office for not only are the reels bulky but they are dangerous and, as they fulfill no purpose, they are not desired. Another article, which by its nature, is bulky and equally undesirable, is the poster, and this also comes within the provisions of the amendment.

Chain of Actors' Fund Committees Completed

Active Interest Is Awakened from Coast to Coast, 1,200 Exhibitors Already Promising to Contribute Ten Per Cent of Their Receipts on May 15

THE National Committee of the Motion Picture Campaign to raise $500,000 for the Actors' Fund of America has now completed a chain of committees from Coast to Coast, and announces that everywhere active interest has been awakened among film people. Already 1,200 exhibitors have promised to contribute ten per cent. or more of their receipts on May 15, which has been designated as National Motion Picture Tribute Day.

Busy men of affairs in every walk of life are lending their aid. John Kunsky, who controls ten theatres, has formed a committee headed by Mayor Marx, of Detroit, as honorary chairman, while Mr. Kunsky has assumed the office of active chairman. In Washington, D. C., an energetic committee has been organized, with Alfred Ferguson as active head. The Omaha Screen Club will give a ball on May 11, donating a percentage of the receipts to the Actors' Fund. D. L. Nicholson heads a committee in New Orleans, which is at work to bring up the donations of the Gulf City to a good figure.

In Buffalo, B. J. Brandon, of the Screen Club, has formed a committee for Western New York. The commitee is centering its activities on a ball to be given May 15, the proceeds of which will be donated to the Fund. In New York City the other night Daniel Frohman, president of the Fund, delivered an address before the Screen Club, and over $2,000 in subscriptions was collected by members.

Here are a few of the latest additions to the theatre list for National Tribute Day. They extend literally from Coast to Coast. F. H. Schanze, Schanze Theatre, Baltimore, Md.; F. M. Bond, Bond Theatre, Pontiac, Ill.; Ario Bertotti, Columbia Theatre, Clinton, Ind.; Jay E. Gould, Crystal Theatre, Glencoe, Minn.; E. Newman, Grand Theatre, Helena, Ark.; Guy Mahoney, Palm Theatre, Missouri Valley, Ia.; C. A. Orr, Princess Theatre, Grace, Idaho; I. W. Dakin, Gem Theatre, Hood River, Ore. The capacity of these houses ranges from 800 down to 200, and they represent cities and hamlets.

A letter received from J. S. Smoot, manager of the Camden Theatre, Parkersburg, W. Va., was of the kind that gives cheer to the Motion Picture Campaign's Executive Committee. Mr. Smoot notified Mr. Goldfish that on Sunday, April 13, he will give a sacred concert in his theatre, the entire proceeds of which will be sent to Treasurer Blackton.

ILLUSTRATING TWO COMING METRO PRODUCTIONS: "DORIAN'S DIVORCE" AND "THE SNOW BIRD"

LIONEL BARRYMORE, GRACE VALENTINE, AND MABEL TALIAFERRO ARE FEATURED IN THESE PHOTOPLAYS

NORMA TALMADGE A TRIANGLE STAR

Norma Talmadge, who followed her sister Constance to the Pacific Coast last fall and is now a Triangle star, is featured in an early May release from the Fine Arts studios, called "The Children in the House." Meanwhile Constance, the pioneer, has decided that there's no place like home and she appears infrequently in Triangle pictures. But Norma is fired with ambition, which has been growing every year since she made her film debut at the age of fifteen.

NORMA AND CONSTANCE TALMADGE
(Fine Arts)

Norma crossed the country to play with Robert Harron and sister Constance in "The Missing Links." She was featured with Tully Marshall and Seena Owen in "Martha's Vindication," and as a reward for merit is to have the big type exclusively in "The Children in the House."

"GARDEN OF ALLAH" A SELIG FILM

Following the production of the Selig drama, "The Crisis," William N. Selig is planning to film "The Garden of Allah" in an elaborate and spectacular manner.

Fox in Charge of Paramount Publicity Department

Former Editor of Pictographs Is Working Out Policy for Special Stories and Feature Articles for Sunday Magazine Sections of Newspapers

EDWARD LYELL FOX, newspaper man and only recently European war correspondent, with a staff of cameramen at the front, is now publicity director for Paramount Pictures Corporation. Mr. Fox was managing editor of Paramount Pictographs before assuming the duties of director of publicity.

Mr. Fox contemplates the development of new fields for newspaper publicity very shortly.

"I am devoting particular attention to special stories and feature articles for the Sunday magazine sections of newspapers," said Mr. Fox to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "Such a field offers unusual opportunities for picture publicity if it is only gone about in the right way.

"Many publicity men seem to forget that in their stories for newspapers they are writing to enlighten and entertain the public. From the looks of their stuff one might suppose that they were attempting to see how many times they could get the brand name of their company in one line of type. That is not good publicity and certainly not good publicity for a Sunday magazine. Mention your company's name once or twice or three times, but don't forget the use of pronouns. Such stories will command much more attention than the other sort.

"The Paramount company has lately been issuing complete music folios with each feature release. There is a fine chance here for distinctive articles. I have secured permission from many grand opera singers to print their names over articles dealing with music and the picture.

"I have also secured other well-known names to incorporate in stories dealing with Paramount pictures. Such articles will undoubtedly call for more attention than plain press stories."

Mr. Fox will also give special attention to trade paper publicity.

"It is an angle of the business which is just as important as the newspaper stories," said Mr. Fox. "I am endeavoring to sharpen this press matter up, to make it as brief and concise as possible."

Griffith Publishes Book on Censor Menace

In "Rise and Fall of Free Speech in America" Noted Producer Lays Stress on Violation of Constitutional Rights by Attempts to Force Censorship in This Country

A POWERFUL array of arguments against the censorship of motion pictures is presented by David Wark Griffith in his book, "The Rise and Fall of Free Speech in America," recently published in Los Angeles.

Mr. Griffith attacks censorship as a violation of the freedom of publication guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and of the States, shows that it springs from intolerance, and that it offers a threat to the press as the next victim after the picture.

He points out that the purport of censorship is to forbid the portrayal of vice in any form, and that this piece of sophistry and injustice, if enforced, would make impossible any picture of worth, because the vital conflict between vice and virtue would then have to be eliminated from the drama. History could not be screened, either—not even the life of Christ, because one of the chief figures in that picture would be a certain Judas Iscariot.

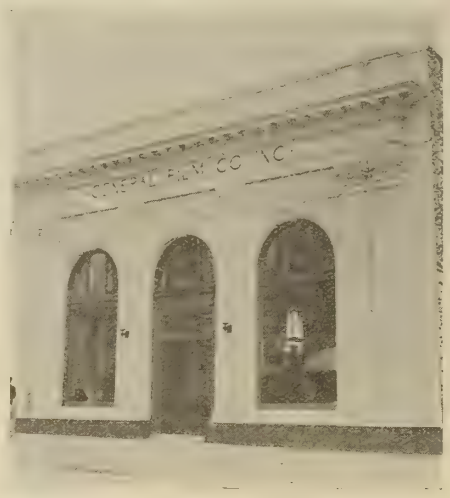
Included in the book, on alternate pages, are short, incisive arguments against the menace of censorship, illustrated by satiric drawings, showing the absurdity and hypocrisy of the censorious attitude of mind. The late Mayor Gaynor's veto of the New York Censorship ordinance, and editorial expressions from newspapers, are quoted.

COOPER AND McNISH FIXTURES IN LAUGH-MAKING FALSTAFFS

The vogue of Falstaff comedy characters has forced a new order of things, to the extent that some of the fun-makers must be made permanent. Therefore, Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish, as "Oscar and Conrad," will now be a fixture in Falstaff comedies. These two will engage in various lines of business, handling pickles or sky-scrapers with equal confidence.

Lloyd Lonergan, their creator, will give the two comedians ample play for their versatility. Cooper and McNish are now in Jacksonville, Fa., where they will pick up enough material to lend variety to the settings of their work. After several weeks there they will return to New Rochelle for the summer.

EIGHT REELER BY INCE FOR VITAGRAPH



Preparations are under way at the Vitagraph's Bay Shore, Long Island, studios for an eight-reel picture directed by Ralph W. Ince. The title has not been announced. Mr. Ince has engaged what he considers the ablest cast possible for the leading characters.

Many of the international Vitagraph successes are due to the finished direction of Mr. Ince. Such productions as "413," "The Juggernaut," "The Wreck," "A Million Bid," "Sins of the Mothers," "The Painted World," "The Goddess," "My Lady's Slipper" and many others have come from his direction.

General Film Moves Two of Its Branches

Boston Exchange Moves into Building Occupying Whole Block—Frisco Office in Its Own Edifice—Newark Branch Enlarges to Handle Increased Business

NOTWITHSTANDING that May 1 is the generally accepted time for moving, the General Film Company, Inc., by reason of increased business found it advisable to move several of its offices to new and enlarged quarters without waiting for May 1.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY OFFICES, SAN FRANCISCO

The Boston office on Monday, April 24, was transferred to Ferdinand and Isabella streets, where it occupies an entire building. This structure is said to be one of the most adaptable for film exchanges in the country. Nothing was overlooked in its construction that would add to the expediting of the film business.

E. J. Farrell, formerly division manager of the General Film Company, assumed management of the Boston office on Monday, April 10. Mr. Farrell, some time ago, was manager of the Boston office, prior to being transferred to take charge of the southern division. Having completed his work in that territory, he returned to his old post as manager of the Boston branch.

Business conditions in New Haven have assumed such a favorable attitude that the General Film Company found it necessary to provide many additional films for use in that territory. N. J. Hacking, formerly in charge of the Boston office, assumed management of the New Haven branch Monday, April 10.

The San Francisco office of the General Film Company is now thoroughly settled in new premises, 225 Golden Gate avenue, in a new building which was erected for the sole use of the General Film Company.

To satisfactorily take care of the requirements of the business in New York State the General Film Company recently took over commodious quarters in Syracuse at 445 South Warren street, from where the majority of theatres in that portion of the State will be looked after, instead of from Albany, as heretofore.

The Newark office of the General Film Company, which up until a very short time ago had operated as a distributing branch, has found it necessary to obtain increased space in order to take care of additional business. Exhibitors in New Jersey will be pleased at this new arrangement, as it saves them the necessity of going to New York for their programs.

Brooklyn Body Is Now Local No. 3, N. Y. League

Lee Ochs, President of State Organization, Officially Awards Charter to New Branch at Meeting Held in Sumner Theatre on April 10—Officers and Trustees Elected

THE Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, in the presence of practically every exhibitor of Brooklyn, became Local No. 3 of the New York State League, when Lee Ochs, president of the league, officially awarded the charter to the new organization at a meeting held in the Sumner theatre April 10.

The following officers were unanimously elected: Mr. Manheimer, Park theatre, president; Mr. Levine, Regent theatre, first vice-president; Mr. Title, T. N. F. theatre, second vice-president; Mr. Lesselbaum, Vermont theatre, recording secretary; Mr. Loeb, Sumner theatre, treasurer; Mr. Stockhammer, Parkway theatre, sergeant-at-arms; Mr. Brandt, New Albany theatre, executive secretary.

The Board of Trustees was elected as follows: Mr. Mooney, Triangle theatre; Mr. Sanders, Marathon theatre; Mr. Glynn, Century theatre. An executive board was chosen, composed of: Mr. Bland, Duffield theatre; Mr. Hollander, Old Post Office theatre; Mr. Israel, Norwood theatre; Mr. Goodman, Broadway Lyceum; Mr. Forester, Globe theatre; Mr. Sokoloff, Marcy theatre; Mr. Sanders, Fifth Avenue Globe.

President Manheimer, in assuming office, called for the co-operation of all the members. "With over 300 theatres in Brooklyn, representing an investment that runs into millions, it is only fitting and proper that we should have something to say as to how our affairs are administered," he said.

His remarks at this meeting were in line with an address made by William Brandt at a previous session on April 3, when Mr. Brandt outlined the urgent reasons for organization by Brooklyn exhibitors.

At the conclusion of the president's address, the Triangle, Plaza, Williamsburg, and Antoinette theatres were elected to membership. It was announced that the next meeting would take place at the Triangle theatre, April 20, at 11 p. m.

ROTHACKER COMPANY FILMS PAPER MAKING IN ALL ITS DETAILS

Moving pictures made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company showing the complete operations of the North American Pulp and Paper Company's plant at Chicoutimi, Canada, were the feature of the big complimentary banquet given recently to J. E. A. Dubuc by Chandler and Company, Inc., and W. F. Fuqua and Company at the Bellevue-Stratford, Philadelphia.

These moving pictures show every detail of the pulp and paper manufacturing, starting with the cutting of the trees in the forest, and ending with the finished newspaper in the hands of a reader.

LATEST THOMAS PLAY ADDED TO RAVER SCREEN LIST

Augustus Thomas' latest offering to the stage, "Rio Grande," which opened at the Empire Theatre on Tuesday night, April 4, will be added to the list of the other Thomas successes, which will be filmed by the Raver Film Corporation.

The opening performance was attended by members of the Raver Film Corporation as guests of Mr. Thomas. Among those in the theatre party were Mr. and Mrs. Harry R. Raver, Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Chessman, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dudley, George Le Soir, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Ver Halen and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Butler Graham.

PEARL WHITE DENIES MARRIAGE RUMORS

Pearl White, the widely known motion picture actress now starring in the Pathe serial, "The Iron Claw," denies emphatically the widely published report that she intends marrying Frank Moran, the heavyweight pugilist.

The "peerless, fearless girl," as she is dubbed by the Pathe press agent, announces that she is not contemplating matrimony with anyone and is wedded only to her art.

REALISTIC SCENES FROM CHAPTER 15 OF "THE GIRL AND THE GAME," SIGNAL-MUTUAL SERIAL, WITH HELEN HOLMES

"ROMANA" RIGHTS IN LARGE DEMAND

W. H. Clune, producer of the cinema drama "Ramona" at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, is daily receiving offers, for state, territorial, European, Australian, South American and other foreign rights for the photoplay. Many propositions of a robust nature have been made for the master picture spectacle founded on Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel.

Next season a number of "Ramona" companies will be placed on tour, playing the legitimate theatres. In the meantime other productions will be seen in Boston and Chicago. In Boston "Ramona" is scheduled to open about the middle of May and in Chicago the first of June.

GARSON MAKES EXTENSIVE PLANS FOR "NE'ER-DO-WELL" SHOWING

Elaborate preparations are being made by Harry I. Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich., for the two weeks' run of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," Selig feature, which opens there on Easter Sunday. Mr. Garson has been advertising this film through circulars, postal cards, newspapers and other methods of publicity for the last four weeks.

He also has the State rights for Michigan on this picture and is now making bookings.

BOWMAN MOVES CHICAGO OFFICE OF INTERNATIONAL TO HEARST BUILDING

John Bowman, in charge of the Chicago offices of the International Film Service, has moved his quarters from the Hearst building, and is now occupying the entire seventh floor of the College building. Mr. Bowman is concentrating on the new serial being put out by the International Film Service.

Wreck Ends 15th Chapter of Signal Railroad Serial

Author Frank H. Spearman Saves His Biggest Thrill Until Last—Exhibitors and Patrons Authority for Statement That Photonovel Is Developed Logically

THE first release of "The Girl and the Game" is nearing its close. The curtain will be rung down on the first complete showing as the fifteenth chapter comes to an end.

Exhibitors and patrons of motion picture theatres all over the United States are authority for the statement that this photonovel of mountain railroad life has proved a logically thrilling and interesting continued photoplay.

From the first turn of the crank Helen Holmes and her cast of co-workers have performed rescues, endured nerve-racking punishment and overcome all manner of obstacles for the sake of human interest realism.

Author Frank H. Spearman, however, has saved the triumphant thrill of the railroad serial until the very last.

George Storm, the persevering young railroad man who made good all along the line, wins Helen's heart and hand. Seagrue is a guest at the "announcement" reception. He has conspired with his accomplices, Ward and Adams, to kill Helen's sweetheart. Through the confusion of signals, Seagrue himself becomes the luckless victim of the assassin's scheme.

The murderers race madly away in their auto, but are not quick enough to elude Spike, Helen and Storm, who follow in fast pursuit. The limited thunders along toward the crossing. Ward and Adams attempt to put the speeding train between them and the pursuing auto. Their efforts place them on the crossing as the heavy train crashes into the auto, rolling wreckage along the right of way. When the powerful engine finally creaks to a standstill under screaming brakes, the mangled and lifeless bodies of Ward and Adams are found in the wreck.

Helen, Storm and Rhinelander are now able to live in happiness.

Kansas Censor Compiles List of Children's Films

Carrie H. Simpson Makes Selection for Educational Boards and Women's Clubs Throughout the State—Two Hundred Subjects Receive Her Approval

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Kansas City, Mo., April 15

PLANS have been under way in this city for a year or more to create a movement which will give children an opportunity to view pictures other than those desired by the average adult audience. As one of the censors, Carrie H. Simpson, assistant in the state superintendent's office, has had many opportunities to review desirable films for the young people. She has compiled a list of productions, with the names of the producers and stars, for help to organizations desiring to make a specialty of children's programs at motion picture theatres.

Miss Simpson has planned a list of desirable children's plays for the educational boards and women's clubs in the state, with the names of producers who make a specialty of juvenile productions. She has a list of more than two hundred pictures at present, many of which she has reviewed herself.

The Women's Federation of Topeka has made arrangements with the manager of the Iris theatre for a series of matinees for children to be given Saturday afternoons. Pictures showing fairy tales, industrial and educational progress, and clean comedy will be on the program. If the plan is a success it is very probable that these matinees will be made a permanent feature of the house.

MOTIOGRAPH KEEPS TABS ON CAMERA FLAWS

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

San Francisco, April 15.

In order to keep a close check upon the work of the camera men and to avoid flaws the California Motion Picture Corporation has installed a late model Motiograph projection machine in its studio at San Rafael, Cal.

A very busy season has been planned by this producing concern and elaborate preparations are being made for the production of "Kismet."

NIGH AND SNOW CAST FOR METRO PLAY WRITTEN BY THE DIRECTOR

Director William Nigh, who recently completed the "The Kiss of Hate," with Ethel Barrymore in the stellar role, has begun work on a feature for Metro in which he will be co-starred with Marguerite Snow. "Buttsy's Glory" is the name of the production, and it was written by Mr. Nigh. Not content with writing it and starring in it, Mr. Nigh is going to go one better and introduce his wife in a prominent part. She is known on the stage and on the screen as Citta Cameron, but she has never appeared on the Metro program.

"Buttsy's Glory" is a comedy-drama. Part of the story is laid on the East Side and along the Great White Way, and the remainder in the West. Mr. Nigh has surrounded himself and Miss Snow with a strong supporting cast, which includes such notable screen artists as Robert Elliot, Roy Applegate, Julius D. Cowles, R. A. Breese, Lieutenant Victor De Linsky, Martin Faust, Cecilia Griffiths and Frank Montgomery. David Thompson, Mr. Nigh's assistant director, will also have an important role in "Buttsy's Glory." Mr. Thompson formerly played leading roles opposite Miss Snow in Thanhouser productions.

TWO OFFICIALS SEEK LOCATIONS FOR ROLIN SUBJECTS

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

Dwight Whiting, business manager, and W. H. Doane, secretary of the Rolin Film Company, making "Lonesome Luke" comedies for Pathé, spent several days of the present week at San Diego and Tia Juana, Mexico, making arrangements for the use of locations on the U. S. cruisers, at the Tia Juana gambling halls, and the border custom house. The company left later in the week, and will make exteriors for two or three subjects, which feature Harold Lloyd as "Lonesome Luke."

While en route to San Diego in his new Mercer, Mr. Whiting came upon an auto accident which had just happened in which an aged couple were badly injured, which resulted in the man's death later. Whiting gave the couple first aid, and then at a speed of a mile a minute, traveled to Oceanside, a distance of twelve miles, and secured a physician.

Five Reel Knickerbocker Star a Month on General

First Release Is "Spellbound," Featuring Lois Meredith, Set for May 15—Leading Lady of the Production Made Hit as Modesty in "Everywoman"

THE General Film Company announces the addition of a five-reel feature in the regular service, to be released once a month under the Knickerbocker Star Features brand. The first release, to be scheduled definitely for some date in the week of May 15, presents Lois Meredith in "Spellbound," a drama of modern society. Henry King, Jackie Saunders and other stars will follow, in five-reel dramas. All productions will be under the direction of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

LOIS MEREDITH

Speaking of the quality of the productions already finished, H. M. Horkheimer said:

"Nothing more plainly indicates the trend of the times than the public demand for features of exceptional quality. Against this demand the exhibitors must balance the quality of available productions and the tendency to place the cost of the few extraordinary features out of all proportion to the exhibitor's limitations. The five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features will go a long way toward solving this problem for the exhibitor. While no expense is being spared, the introduction of modern efficiency methods into our studios enables us to produce features of exceptional quality for release in the regular service.

"I am sure that everybody who sees Lois Meredith in 'Spellbound' will agree that no recent production of any character has surpassed this extraordinary picture in quality and scope of production, in strength and story, in artistic effects, or in the presentation of a singularly beautiful and gifted actress.

"That is to say nothing of the productions immediately following, with such popular stars as Henry King and Jackie Saunders. Mr. King is directing his own productions with exceptional ability and artistic strength; the other stars are working under the direction of able producers, supervised by my brother and myself. The stories are the best obtainable, the production lavish, the photography superfine."

Lois Meredith, star of the first release, "Spellbound," won immediate success as Modesty in "Everywoman," then toured the Coast as prima donna in "Madame Sherry." Other successes followed rapidly—in the title role of "Peg 'o My Heart," and in the Broadway production of "Help Wanted," which she later transferred to the screen in the Morosco-Paramount production.

Recent screen appearances of Miss Meredith include "My Best Girl," "An Enemy to Society," and "The Antique Dealer," in which she was co-star with Cyril Maude. She has just signed a new contract with the Horkheimer Brothers, calling for her appearance in a series of specially written stories to be released as five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features.

A special campaign has been planned for the five-reel Knickerbocker Star Features. Artists are already at work preparing posters, which will be issued to meet the requirements of all ranks of exhibitors.

NASHVILLE CROWDS RECOGNIZE HELEN HOLMES ON STREET

Special to Motion Picture News.

Nashville, Tenn., April 15.

Helen Holmes was a visitor in Nashville on April 6. Her visit was unheralded, but scores recognized her upon the streets.

Miss Holmes stopped off in Nashville while en route to Chicago from Florida, where she has just completed an engagement.

Number One

What Is a Trade Journal?

APPROXIMATELY three-quarters of a million dollars is being spent in trade journal advertising this year.

A huge sum!

So the answer to the above question ought to prove mighty interesting to the advertiser and the advertising manager who direct this volume of advertising to the trade.

Let us see.

When we say "advertising to the trade" we mean to the exhibitor, the feature buyer, the producer—to no one else.

Ninety percent of this advertising is directed to the exhibitor—at least that; the smaller percentage levelled at the state rights buyer is also meant for the exhibitor; a very small percentage—the advertising of studios, studio equipment, commercial printing, etc., is directed to the producer.

But, at any rate, here we have, clearly circumscribed, our trade field—the exhibitor, feature buyer, producer.

A trade paper, therefore, is a paper that goes to these three factors.

A trade paper that has an extensive circulation outside this trade purchasing field is not a trade paper. It is a class paper. It goes to the general class affiliated with the industry—to the actor and actress and scenario writer—who are not trade purchasers; that is to say, they do not book pictures, or buy territory or purchase theatre equipment.

This circulation is, therefore, outside the circle for you, the trade advertiser. It is waste—or, as it is aptly called in England, non-useful circulation.

You want only trade circulation for your trade advertising and you want only to pay for trade circulation.

Now, how may you know that you are buying and only paying for trade circulation?

Well, first of all, you can use your own good sense.

You can estimate roughly the number of your prospects—those who will possibly buy or book your product.

Are you advertising a weekly service of one, two and three reels? How many theatres have you now? How do 7,000 theatres sound to you as a maximum number? Pretty good, doesn't it? Or, say 10,000.

Very well. Then what do such figures as 15,000 or 20,000 or 30,000 mean to you? There's something wrong here, isn't there? What is and why is this excess circulation?

Are you advertising a feature service? How do 5,000 theatre prospects sound to you? Pretty good, don't they? Then what does 20,000 circulation mean to you and why, for instance, do you print 20,000 expensive inserts to reach these 5,000?

Are you advertising theatre equipment? Then you may, as well you know, rule out of your calculations several thousand theatres which always have and always will buy second-hand equipment. Have you got 10,000 prospects?

So much for your own good sense.

Crowds pushed, shoved, jammed and crammed their way into Chicago Houses, until these fortunate theatres night after night were displaying the S. R. O. sign continuously.

No artiste in the world ever received so great an ovation in a screen entertainment; so great an achievement as evidencing her personal popularity.

The Public came and paid their good money. The Press devoted columns to the warmest expressions of approval and praise. In New York at the Globe Theatre on Broadway, came a repetition of the Chicago crowds.

THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

COMMON sense is common sense, whether it be in the show business or in anything else. If the Exhibitors complaining about hard times would stop to analyze causes and not follow like sheep, they would find the moving picture is still, and always will be the amusement of the masses. The masses are still here and want to be amused. Sensible, conservative producers are still here and are ready to supply them with the short, diversified program that the masses want for their amusement. If the Exhibitor will only think and act for himself and be original instead of always watching what the other fellow is doing, he will soon find that the United States mint isn't in it when it comes to making money out of a theatre which is operated with a stamp of individuality. Remember: MOVING PICTURES ARE HERE TO STAY. THE FEATURE PROGRAM HAS PROVEN UNPROFITABLE TO THE EXHIBITOR. THE EXHIBITOR WILL NOT STAY IN BUSINESS IF SUCH BUSINESS IS UNPROFITABLE. EXHIBITING WAS PROFITABLE BEFORE THE FEATURE CRAZE STARTED. The only logical conclusion is—THE DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM MUST COME BACK.

The most prosperous Exhibitors in the world today are the fortunate ones who are showing the REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM—the Greatest Program On Earth.

Mary Fuller in "A Huntress of Men." With Joseph Gerard and Sydney Bracey. A caveman drama of absorbing interest. Fifteenth Red Feather Production. Story by G. Vere Tyler. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released May 8. Mary thought love was a game, and ensnaring men's hearts the greatest sport in the world. She brought Sydney to her feet a broken-hearted, disillusioned boy, prevented from suicide only by the timely arrival of a friend. The action hinges on Mary's introduction to a big, dominant man, vigorously portrayed by Joseph Gerard who tells her he is going to marry her, tame her and make her love him. Innumerable strong situations tell how this seeming mismating brought a great and tender love to them both. A great entertainment for all with especial interest for the ladies in seeing Mary wear forty 'leven different gowns, each a little chic-cer than the others, and gosh, how she can wear clothes. If you, Mr. Exhibitor want to please everybody that comes to your theatre, you will book and show this great Red Feather Production, and thank the old reliable Universal for the privilege.

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Mark of a Gentleman." With Agnes Vernon. Two-Reel Gold Seal Society Drama. Directed by Wm. Worthington. Released May 9. You'll be surprised even to think of anyone mistaking Herbert for anything but a gentleman, but you see he took a job as athletic instructor—teaching a lot of tired business men how to reduce, and improve their wind, so of course Agnes's papa couldn't see him socially—at first. Herbert sprung a little surprise though that puts a corking climax into this bully picture which will tickle your audiences all over in spots.

"Gertie's Gasolene Glide." With Gertrude Selby, Billy Armstrong and Phil Dunham. Two-Reel L-Ko Automobile Comedy. Released May 10. Billy and Gertie go for a motorcycle ride. She is tickled to death until the other chap comes along with a cycle car built for two. But when that bucks and throws her down a manhole Gertie gets peeved. By this time Billy has acquired a flivver. She is on the upward scale all right, and goes for another ride. But she has the manhole habit by this time, and finally marries the guy with a cycle car. Billy then takes bride and groom for a honeymoon ride and for one solid roaring, screaming reel he makes the Ford do stunts and flip-flops, being merrily chased by a police auto patrol and a cycle cop in the meantime. For sheer fun and for clever, original and daring auto stunts this comedy is positive-ly in a class by itself. It has more punch than any slapstick laughmaker you ever saw. Don't overlook this one if you want to give the comedy-loving fans a genuine treat.

"Her Husband's Faith." Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnston. A Two-Reel Laemmle Emotional Drama of unusual strength. Directed by Lloyd Carleton. Released May 11. Dorothy says to her husband: "Five blissful years of marriage, a beautiful home, a tender husband and a darling baby—surely God has been good to me." Within the hour, her home, her husband, her baby and their happiness were threatened by a shadow from the past. Her husband's faith pointed the way out, and the dark hour served only to bring them closer together. A regular—regular Universal Program picture. That's a lot.

"The Capital Prize." With Harry Benham and Tina Marshall. A thrilling Two-Reel Imp Secret Service Drama. Story by Edwin Stevens and Norbert Lusk. Directed by Edwin Stevens. Released May 12. One of America's finest actors, Edwin Stevens made his first screen appearance in "The Man Inside," a wonderful Universal five reel feature. Unlike many stage stars he has made a study of the requirements of the screen and the Universal now presents the first picture he has ever directed. It is a wonderfully good picture with two particularly fine actors in the lead. Further evidence of the constant progressive policy that makes the Universal the mightiest and most popular program on earth.

"A Fight For Love." With G. Raymond Nye and Roberta Wilson. Two-Reel 101-Bison Black-Hand Drama. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released May 13. A sensational thriller that will keep your audiences gasping. The inner methods of the Black Hand. The secret devices of the dread Camorra. The third degree applied to a man whom the Camorra has "framed." A most unexpected climax and a thread of love interest combine to put punch after punch into a most vigorous presentation. Enough action crammed into two reels to make five reels of the ordinary producer's "features."

"A Soul For Sale." An intensely emotional and daring Three-Reel Rex Drama. Directed by Henry Bently. Released May 14. Bartering her innocence for gold; sanctifying the sacrifice with a marriage rite; with the approval of a father who otherwise faced ruin, a lovely girl in this intense photo play pays the terrible price which is always exacted from those who attempt to stifle a true love. A remarkable feature that will pack your house.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

THE weekly report of Billy Sheer, casting director of the World-Equitable, indicates that the week just past has been a busy one in many quarters. During the six days 10,645 persons applied for work, and 3,672 were engaged. The report adds: "The number of applicants included every type of man, woman and child, including ex-brokers, ex-pugilists, broken down tragedians, former stage beauties, debutantes, society women, notoriety seekers and ambitious mothers of infant prodigies." This number of applicants means two to the minute for every day of twelve hours. Notwithstanding this, since we have seen many of the people who apply to Billy Sheer, we still insist we would like to be a casting director.

Universal seems determined to hold fast to its Cunard line. With the departure of the late lamented Grace from the Universal ranks, the former Mina Cunard, who has successively and successfully passed through such metamorphoses as Mina Jeffries and Margaret Mayburn, returns to the old stand and becomes Mina Cunard again.

No, this is not the press department of the new "Twilight Sleep" films. This is the official trouble-maker of the Selig Zoo, caught in one of his characteristic poses. It is part of a campaign to offset the growing belief that a lot of the good old stories are "bunk." The camera does not lie—that is, the still camera does not—and it is plain to be seen just what Old Doc Stork's favorite occupation really is. Other characters who will appear personally, in the same manner as the Doc, and dispel the idea that they are a myth, probably will include Santa Claus, the Pay Day Ghost, Mother Grundy, Boreas, the Truthful Press Agent and Dorothy Arnold.

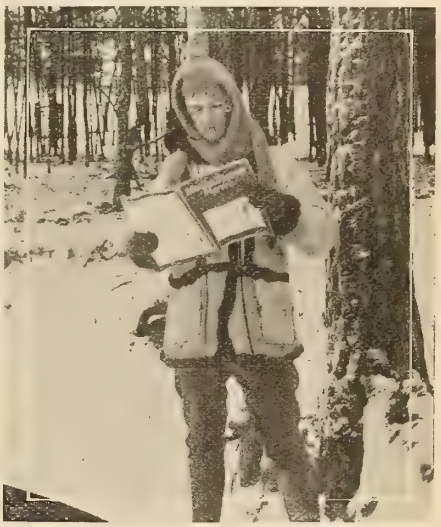
IN WHICH WE FOLLOW INSTRUCTIONS

They have come with tears and weeping,
They have come with the heart bow'd low,
They have come with a curse, with a threat—or worse,
To urge that we write them a sparkling verse
In aid of the Big Trade Show.

Well, we are the kid that can do it!
And ours are the willing minds;
And hence this lay to the Sixth of May,
When the myriad Garden searchlights play,
And the big spell-Binder binds.

Thus we bow to Alexander,
With hope in our nervous glance;
But we scorn the hint that we've done our stint
With our eyes on the door of the local mint,
Or on checks drawn in advance.



THE DIARY OF OUR OWN SAMUEL PEPYS
(By special arrangement with F. P. A., holder of the copyright.)

April 11. Up exceedingly betimes, and to the city by train, meeting thereon George Irving, the employer of actors; also his associate, Ralph Dean, who has purchased himself a new bonnet, even as I did forecast. Learn that my journal is placed on public sale this day, through meeting Richard Schayer, who, as is his wont, sayeth all things therein are wrong; yet do I comfort myself with thoughts of this thing and that. To the office of Sol Lesser, who telleth me that his cinema-play, yclept "The Ne'er-Do-Well," is meeting with large success in the provinces. Adjusted the matter of the roses with May and Lillian, and find greater peace around the office.

April 12. A dismal day enough, for that I must pay four pounds, six, for the assurance upon my life, which I do each quarter, albeit with as much delay as I can contrive. To the Lasky offices, there to meet Hector Turnbull, who is lately come from the west, and with him and John Flinn to a public for luncheon. Note in these offices, as well as in most that I do visit, how the damsels employed are at great pains to address each other as Miss So-and-so, and Miss This-and-that, whereas the men who handle large affairs are merely Dick, or Joe, or Felix, or Bill, at which I marvel somewhat.

We wouldn't be F. H. Richardson, who conducts the projection department of a certain motion picture trade journal, for six new subway tickets. It appears that he made a visit to St. Louis recently, and gave a little advice on projection methods, which was so poorly received as to call forth a big two-column "roast" in the Searchlight, a St. Louis picture publication. In the course of this article, Mr. Richardson is successively referred to as "Czar," "Emperor," "Kaiser," "Wizard," "Baron," "Duke," "Prince," "Sir," "Lord Wisdom," "Count," "Wiseheimer," and "Sultan." Uneasy must lie the head which wears so many crowns.

Now we come. Not to be outdone by any contemporary, or anyone else, for that matter, we present herewith a picture of Albert K. Dawson, the well and favorably known trade journal reader, reading MOTION PICTURE NEWS "somewhere in Bulgaria." Since going to Europe to plunge into the war, this enterprising cameraman has made considerable of a reputation as a reader of trade journals in odd corners of the globe; in fact, so absorbed does he become in the nearest trade journal at hand that he is often careless about getting within range of some camera lens. As may be noted. Mr. Dawson thinks no more of reading MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in the depths of the Bulgarian forests than he does of putting water in his vin très ordinaire. Enterprising publishers might be able to make satisfactory arrangements for having Mr. Dawson read their publication in the Arabian desert, or on the summit of Stromboli. It really is a shame that Sixtus V. removed the ruins of the Septizonium from the Palatine Hill. This, the only seven-story ruin in ancient Rome, would have been a dandy place for Albert K. Dawson to climb up and read a trade journal.

With the opening of the new Rialto theatre, April 21, there will be twelve theatres on Broadway showing Triangle pictures. These houses, several of which show Triangle films exclusively, are Procter's Fifth Avenue, the Knickerbocker, Rialto, New York, Circle, Eighty-first Street, Schuyler, Broadway Photoplay, Claremont, Audubon, Riverside, and Nemo. They constitute a chain of fairly well-spaced links, extending from Twenty-eighth to 167th streets.

HERRINGTON MAKES PLAIN THE LOCATION OF SIXTH CONVENTION

Chicago, April 15.

At a meeting held by the members of the Sixth National Exposition and Convention Committee at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, in honor of Fred J. Herrington, the current rumors regarding the official location of the exposition were brought to the attention of the national president. Mr. Herrington makes the following statement:

"I, Fred J. Herrington, national president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, do hereby certify that the Sixth National Convention and Exposition to be held in Chicago in the second week of July is the only officially authorized national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America."

(Signed) Fred J. Herrington,
National President.
Sidney Smith,
Secretary for Illinois.

KESSEL AND BAUMANN LEASE TRANS-CONTINENTAL WIRE

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

The coast to coast leased wire connecting the offices of Thomas H. Ince and Business Manager E. H. Allen at the Culver City studios with those of the executives, Messrs. Kessel and Baumann, at their New York office, was put into operation during the past week, and serves to keep the studios in constant touch with important matters in the east. This is the first motion picture company to install such a business convenience.

"JUDITH OF THE CUMBERLANDS" FOR PHOTODRAMA BY SIGNAL

Director General J. P. McGowan of the Signal Film Corporation has just closed negotiations with Alice McGowan for the film rights to her novel, Judith of the Cumberlands.

Although the scenario has not yet been prepared, it is understood that Helen Holmes will be cast in the title role, with the direction in charge of J. P. McGowan.

Filming of this story will follow the completion of "Whispering Smith."

"END OF WORLD" MAKES BID FOR FIRST PLACE

The next feature of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street, New York, entitled "The End of the World," is scheduled for release on about April 20. It is a spectacular production in six parts, presenting in a fanciful manner the most likely results of the presence of a comet in the Earth's atmosphere, and portrays the panic and havoc which follow.

A love story winds its way through scenes of real flood and holocaust.

"NE'ER-DO-WELL" MAKES RECORD

Special to Motion Picture News.

Nashville, Tenn., April 15.

This last week at the Parthenon theatre proved one of the greatest record breakers in the history of the beautiful house, where "The Ne'er-Do-Well" proved a success in every way and the crowds left every night with praise for the photoplay.

Two Triangles for Opening of Rialto, New York

Rothapfel Picks "The Good Bad-Man," Starring Douglas Fairbanks, and "The Other Man," Featuring Roscoe Arbuckle, for First Night at Ultra-Modern Picture House

TWO Triangle stars have been chosen by S. L. Rothapfel to dedicate his ultra-modern motion picture playhouse, the Rialto, which will have its long heralded opening on Friday, April 21. The honor which he thus accords to the Griffith-Ince-Sennett standard of production has an added significance in Rothapfel's recognition of the position attained in six months of film work by Douglas Fairbanks, former light comedian of the legitimate stage.

It was Fairbanks who made the big hit at the Knickerbocker Theatre opening last September, when Triangle plays were first revealed to the theatregoing public.

"The Good Bad-Man" is the fifth picture Fairbanks has done for Triangle at the Fine Arts studios, and has the further interest of having been based on a scenario of his own. Taking as his leading character the western bad-man, he departs from the William S. Hart interpretation and presents a sparkling figure in a broadly humorous atmosphere. There is plenty of gripping drama in the picture, however, and W. Christy Cabanne has overlooked no opportunities for spectacular effects. Bessie Love is the heroine and other parts are played by Mary Alden, Sam De Grasse, Pomeroy Cannon and Fred Burns.

Roscoe Arbuckle is straining every nerve at Fort Lee to finish "The Other Man," which Rothapfel announces as the comedy feature of his opening program. The bad weather of last week delayed the filming but the director believes the comedy will be ready in time. Arbuckle plays two roles in the picture, appearing as a tramp and as the highly polished suitor for the hand of the rich girl. A masked ball provides many spectacular features, and the big thrill is furnished at the cost of an automobile sent over a cliff. Irene Wallace, Minta Durfee, Al St. John, William Jefferson, Joe Bordeau and Alice Lake have prominent roles.

"Jockey of Death," English Hit, for Theatres Here

Signet Films Offer on State Rights Plan Subject Written for the Exploitation of Two European Acrobats, Whose Stunts Consist of Mile Slide on Cable and Similar Daring Feats

"THE JOCKEY OF DEATH," a photoplay melodrama which is reported to have made a sensation in England, is about to be offered in the American market on the State rights plan. Signet Films, directed by J. L. Kempner, Candler building, New York, will handle the picture.

The dramatic action of "The Jockey of Death" was devised to exploit the daring of two widely known European acrobats, and thrills were the constant object of the producers. The last two reels are given over to what is said to be one of the most startling chases ever filmed. One of the stunts, it is announced, shows the hero and heroine sliding down a mile-long cable from the top to the bottom of a mountain.

Another stunt, according to the announcement, shows the same pair attempting to elude their pursuers by riding across a thin wire cable on a bicycle, the girl riding the wheel and her companion standing behind her, balancing with a big pole. From this cable both principals do a drop into a river.

A year and two months were required for the making of the picture. A number of its scenes are laid in a specially constructed circus amphitheatre, and in these scenes fully two thousand people took part, it is said.

Mr. Kempner and his associates, who are preparing to distribute the subject, believe it will have great interest for a large number of theatres in this country in which thrills are the big pulling power.

"Big Novels Make Best Screen Plays"—Miss Young

Among Authors Whose Works Will Furnish Material for Scenarios Are Chambers, Morris, Caine, Beach, Major, Poe, de Maupassant, Maeterlinck and Phillips

WHEN the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation begins the production of its feature pictures in July it will have a list of scenarios to draw upon that will include adaptations of many successful novels. Among the authors who will be represented are Robert W. Chambers, Gouverneur Morris, Hall Caine, Rex Beach, Charles Major, Edgar Allan Poe, Guy de Maupassant, Maurice Maeterlinck and David Graham Phillips.

Miss Young firmly believes that big novels make better pictures than do stage plays.

"The motion picture should be a narrative rather than a drama," said the star in discussing her plans. "The sooner producers realize this the better for the industry. The construction of the so-called photo-drama is in reality merely the presentation in pictorial form of a connected series of incidents that tell an absorbing story.

"The most successful scenario writers today are beginning to realize this. They are no longer attempting to build their pictures along the lines of stage drama. They are making them purely narrative in form.

"With this great difference between the screen and stage in mind, we are planning to devote ourselves to the production of pictures that are either adaptations of remarkable and well-known novels or are filmed from original scenarios that contain great stories. We don't contemplate doing any adaptations of plays, though from time to time we may find one that is both a great drama and a great story."

Los Angeles Begins Nation-wide Censor Fight

Motion Picture Producers' Association Launches Campaign with Shipment to Exhibitors of Slides Containing Brief But Emphatic Reasons Why Public Should Be Censors Instead of Permitting Politicians to Exercise Arbitrary Power for Their Own Selfish Ends—Letter Sets Forth Aims of Men Behind Movement

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

THE Motion Picture Producers' Association of Los Angeles has now launched its national fight against the censorship of pictures, and has sent out to every exhibitor the first consignment of slides containing brief, but emphatic reasons why the American public should be the censors, instead of permitting politicians to take the matter into their own hands, thus depriving the people of their right to see what they choose.

The campaign has been carefully laid out by the officers and members of the association. This list includes H. O. Davis, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Thomas H. Ince, of the New York Motion Picture Corporation; David W. Griffith, of the Fine Arts Film Company; David Horsley, Bostock Jungle and Film Company; Frank A. Garbutt, of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and George W. Stout, of the Keystone Film Company.

The desires of the association are set forth concisely in a letter to the exhibitors. With this is a copy of a speech which may be made by the exhibitor or one of his attaches. Included in the consignment are petitions which may be placed in the lobby where patrons of the theatre may sign them.

Strong Appeal Made for Censor Fight

A vigorous appeal for the co-operation of exhibitors in the nation wide fight on censorship is carried in the letter sent out by the association. It reads, in part, as follows:

"The Motion Picture Producers' Association, which includes practically every important manufacturer of motion pictures in the entire country, is waging a battle against censorship of motion pictures in any form, either Federal, state or municipal, and we earnestly ask for your able and valuable co-operation in this great work.

"Your interests and our interests are identical. If we have our pictures censored to the extent that they undoubtedly will be if the movement for the appointment for a Federal censorship is successful, the result will be the practical obliteration of motion pictures. Manufacturers will not be able to withstand the assaults that will come from every conceivable source—assaults chiefly from politicians and so-called reformers who are in the reform and political business for what money they can get out of it.

"We are certain that if Federal censorship becomes a reality that every state will immediately pass censorship regulations, each city and town will do the same thing, and the result will be a condition so chaotic that manufacturers will be driven from their studios.

"Motion pictures, the chief form of amusement of the people, will be a thing of the past, because a picture that will be passed by a censor board in California, for instance, will be ruled out of another state, and with such a condition facing him, the manufacturer will be forced to abandon his work. This is not a mere prophecy. It is a statement of the actual condition that surely will prevail if all forms of censorship are not killed, and killed at once.

"Your business is threatened. You have an investment. You have a substantial income, and it goes without question that you are a law-abiding citizen. But if this Federal censorship or any other form of censorship is inaugurated or any new form of censorship is extended your business will instantly be worthless, your investment will be a total loss, because the motion picture manufacturers, being unable to go ahead with their business, your supply of pictures will come to an abrupt end.

"There will be no more motion pictures for you to show to your patrons. And it is because your own business is going to be wiped out of existence by the censors that you must join your individual effort with our combined effort. Here is what we, the biggest association of film manufacturers in the world, want you to do, and do at once. Do it right after you have read and realized this letter's importance to you—to your own business!

Easy for Exhibitor to Help

"With this letter we are sending you a perforated slip which you will place between two pieces of glass of the size of the slides you usually use and project on your screens as soon as your audience is seated. Then immediately afterward turn your house lights full on and go before your audience, explain to them in a few words that the motion pictures—their own popular form of entertainment and amusement—are seriously threatened by a lot of politicians and ill-advised reformers, and that you want them to sign a petition asking that all forms of censorship be done away with.

"Then have your ushers pass around the petitions, which will be supplied to you by the agency from which your service is obtained, and as soon as the signatures of your audience are secured, proceed with your show. Repeat this until you have secured the name of every person that comes to your house.

"Take the petition to all the business men in your neighborhood—take it to your banker—take it to the newspapers with whom you advertise—get them to write vigorous editorials protesting against any kind of censorship of motion pictures—in short, talk non-censorship to everybody that you know. Keep at it until you have secured as many signatures to the petitions as you possibly can."

This is merely the beginning of the campaign by the Producers' Association, and they are already making arrangements for furthering the work among the exhibitors in the hope of inducing everyone to take an active part in this, and kill censorship in every form. The campaign will cost the producers approximately fifteen hundred dollars monthly. This fund has all been subscribed, and it is the hope that eastern producers may be induced to take part in this by becoming members and thus extending their financial support.

Early Release for "Invisible Enemy" from E-K-O

Film Showing Ravages of Tuberculosis and Designed to Aid National Crusade Against the Disease Will Receive Active Co-operation of Association Fighting Deadly Malady

"THE INVISIBLE ENEMY," a film showing the ravages of tuberculosis and designed to aid in the national crusade against the disease, will be released by the E-K-O Film Company with the active co-operation of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

"This association," said General Manager George Szirmay in explaining the method of distribution, "has 3,500 agencies scattered over the country and is a valuable asset to our enterprise.

"In the various local anti-tuberculosis associations are leading citizens who will use their personal influence to get our photoplay before the public. An extensive advertising campaign has been mapped out. It will be carried into every locality, initiated by the desire of the local anti-tuberculosis societies to render their own propaganda as effective as possible by using 'The Invisible Enemy' as a weapon in the crusade against the great white plague."

The picture was shown in New York April 6 to a gathering of prominent physicians, social workers, and press representatives. A definite release date will be announced soon.

AMERICAN ORDERS PRODUCTION OF ONE, TWO AND THREE REEL SUBJECTS

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

Telegraphic information from the Chicago offices of the American Film Manufacturing Company to the producing plant at Santa Barbara during the past week caused a material change in policy there. The order in question instructed that only one, two and three reel subjects shall be made by the ten or more producing companies in the future with the exception of that company under the direction of William F. Russell, who also plays the star part.

Mr. Russell will continue in the making of subjects of four reels or more, as his contract specifies that.

ESSANAY PLAYERS GO TO CHATTANOOGA

Special to Motion Picture News.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 15.

Several members of the Essanay company, headed by Capt. E. H. Calvert, have arrived in this city, and are registered at the Hotel Patten. The company will be here about ten days taking scenes for a great feature on which they have been working for several months. They came here from French Lick Springs, where some of the scenes were taken. Included in the list of those who are with the company in Chattanooga are Capt. Calvert, Margaret Clayton, Louise Annie Walthall, Louis Stone and A. H. Davis.

For several weeks last summer Essanay actors had headquarters on Signal Mountain. During this period several features were developed. The company at that time was headed by Capt. Calvert and Lillian Drew.

"NE'ER-DO-WELL" PLAYS TO BIG BUSINESS

Remarkable showings are reported by the houses which have booked Sol L. Lesser's feature, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," now being distributed by the V-L-S-E exchanges. These reports include the following: Pittsburgh, Pitt theatre, one dollar, top price; record breaking business for four weeks' run; Chicago, Fine Arts theatre, four weeks' run, at fifty cents, top price; Portland, Heilig theatre, new record for two weeks' run; Los Angeles, Clune Auditorium, turned away business during run, and now rebooked; Oakland, Cal., MacDonough theatre, two solid weeks; Cleveland, Orpheum theatre, three weeks to tremendous business; Kansas City, Willis Wood theatre, record-breaking business for two weeks.

BROCHURE IN COLORS IS ISSUED BY KLEINE FOR "GLORIA'S ROMANCE"

Announcing the new motion picture novel, "Gloria's Romance," in which Billie Burke is starred, George Kleine has issued a handsome brochure in colors.

This contains a description of the subject matter of the serial, facts about the producer, the star and supporting cast, and the authors, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes. The extensive advertising campaign which George Kleine has arranged and a list of exhibitor helps are also set forth.

The brochure is handsomely illustrated and is an exceptionally good piece of advertising.

OAKMAN AT WORK ON SEA STORY FOR FOX

A new face will appear in Fox films when the latest of William Farnum pictures reaches the screen from the William Fox organization.

Wheeler Oakman, well known in pictures and for several years working on the Pacific Coast, has been engaged and already is at work at Santa Cruz and Catalina Island, California, in a big story of the sea. This is the first sea story ever made by William Fox. Oscar Apfel is directing the picture.

Many of New York Motion Staff Move to Culver City

Business, Scenario and Publicity Departments See Migration of Members—West Makes Speed Record in Production, Completing a Bessie Barriscale Subject in 19 Days

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

DIRECTOR RAYMOND B. WEST of the Ince forces has established a new record for speed in production at that plant, having filmed a Triangle Kay-Bee subject, featuring Bessie Barriscale, in nineteen days' working time. The speedy work of Director West and his company is attributed to the efficiency system that prevails at the new Ince Culver City studios. The story just filmed is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and is very much like "The Cup of Life," in which Miss Barriscale appeared last year. William Desmond plays the male lead in this.

Thomas H. Ince has employed Beatrice Bernham, protege of Madame Rasch, who is considered one of the most successful teachers of artistic dancing, to instruct Dorothy Dalton, who is cast as the principal character for a coming Triangle Kay-Bee feature, and will be called upon to execute a number of whirling dances. Walter Edwards will direct this subject, story for which was written by Monty Katterjohn, and Howard Hickman will be the leading man.

William S. Hart and a company of players are spending some time in the snowcapped regions of Mount Baldy, northeast of Los Angeles, making scenes for a Canadian Northwest story in which Hart plays the part of a half-breed Indian. The scenes required in the mountain region will keep the company away about two weeks. This story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and prior to leaving for the mountains Hart spent an entire day in testing various makeups in order to learn which would make the best showing in photographs.

The past week saw the migration of members of the business, scenario and publicity departments of the New York Motion Picture Corporation from the Inceville studios to the new Ince Culver City plant, at which place they will continue their duties in the future. Approximately two hundred men continue in the building of the new plant, and it is rapidly nearing completion. The administration building has been completed, as well as several of the big individual stages. This leaves but a very small staff at the Inceville studios, only that portion necessary for Western or mountain country pictures.

Director Charles Giblyn is making the final scenes this week for the third Frank Keenan Kay-Bee subject. This has a dramatic theme dealing with conditions existing between the North and South, Keenan playing the part of a Southern colonel of today. The subject abounds with magnificent indoor settings, all of which were built and photographed at the new Ince Culver City plant. Playing with Mr. Keenan are Louise Glaum, Charles Ray and George Fisher.

Triangle Makes Shift in May Release Dates

Fairbanks and Norma Talmadge Pictures Changed on Triangle Program—De Wolf Hopper Comedy, "Sunshine Dad," Comes in Week of 23d

BY a switch in release dates Douglas Fairbanks and "The Good Bad-Man" change places with Norma Talmadge and "The Children in the House" on the Triangle service. Thus Miss Talmadge joins the April roster of stars and Fairbanks, who was on the opening program of the month, will initiate the May service. It was easy to hold back "The Good Bad-Man," because S. L. Rothapfel has selected this new comedy drama as the opening feature of his new Rialto Theatre in New York.

Week of April 23 brings forth De Wolf Hopper in an original comedy, "Sunshine Dad," in which the star has notable support from Fay Tincher, Chester Withey, Edward Dillon, Max Davidson and others of his associates in "Don Quixote," and Leo, the Fine Arts lion. William H. Thompson, the Scotch Uncle with Billie Burke in "Peggy," makes his first appearance as a Triangle star this week in the Ince picture, "Civilization's Child." Anna Lehr is featured with the veteran character actor.

With Miss Talmadge on the closing program of the month is H. B. Warner, who loses his "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and "The Raiders" identity in a characterization of the drug-crazed physician of C. Gardner Sullivan's "The Beggar of Cawnpore." This drama is based on the Sepoy rebellion of 1857 in India. Lola May and a typical Ince cast will be seen. The Fine Arts kiddies are prominent in "The Children in the House," and a large number of Griffith favorites have been assigned to the grown-up roles.

ANIMATED CARTOON ADVERTISING MAKES HIT

Special to Motion Picture News.

Cleveland, O., April 15.

The animated cartoon advertisement introduced to Cleveland by the Superior Slide Company, Columbia building, promises to revolutionize screen advertising methods in this territory. It was shown first at the Corona theatre, and was cordially indorsed both by exhibitors and by advertisers.

One of the best advertisements was that of a local milliner. A large hat box first appeared on the screen. Then a number of hat stands flew out of the box. Various styles in shapes followed, and each one settled on a stand. Trimmings in the form of flowers and ribbons then took their proper places around the shapes, and lastly there came the name and address of the store from which these new Easter fashions in headgear could be purchased.

There were eight or nine advertisements, equally novel and equally good. It is far and away the most effective form of screen advertising yet devised.

ROTHACKER SUBJECTS SHOWN AT INDIANA SOCIETY MEET

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Chicago, April 15.

The feature of the annual meeting of the Chicago-Indiana Society, which was held Saturday evening, April 8, at the Blackstone Hotel, were moving pictures made by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, the official cinema photographer of this society.

These pictures showed the various activities of the society for the past four years and some special pictures of the event itself, in which George Ade, president of the society; Wilbur Nesbit and John McCutcheon and other Indiana celebrities took principal parts.

Outdoor Life and Events in Single Reels from "G"

Brand, Known as Reel Life, Will Have Diversity of Subjects, from "Feats of Horsemanship" to "Butterfly Life" and "Alligator Farming"—Films Suitable for Private Gatherings

CARRYING out President Freuler's desire that Mutual Pictures shall have the utmost variety, the Gaumont company will begin on May 7, the weekly release of a single-reel to be devoted to outdoor life and events under the name of Reel Life.

The present tendency in making up a program, happily, is to get away from short subjects that are merely "fillers." It is the intention of the Mutual Film Corporation and the Gaumont company to offer in Reel Life material that will hold the interest of every spectator in the auditorium. The photography of these nature films will in every case be the best possible, and the subjects will be chosen always with due regard to maintaining the interesting variety which President Freuler so desires.

Reel Life bears the same relation to a magazine that The Mutual Weekly does to a daily newspaper. The latter presents views of news of the world on the screen, whereas Reel Life will handle those "filmable" subjects which one naturally expects to find discussed and illustrated in a magazine. The Gaumont company, because of its foreign connections, has at its disposal pictures made by European scientists who have taken this method of recording insect and animal life for purposes of scientific research. Exhibitors should find that Reel Life will be a strong feature not only for regular programs, but also for lectures, Y. M. C. A. and Boy Scout gatherings, and children's matinees.

As the Gaumont company edits and manufactures the Mutual Weekly, it has under its direction over two hundred cameramen throughout America who may be called upon for matter of magazine interest for this new Mutual-Gaumont release. Reel Life is being managed by C. M. White, assistant to General Manager F. G. Bradford of the Gaumont company.

The first Reel Life release will be Sunday, May 7. On that day the new single-reel will show three interesting subjects. These are "Feats of Horsemanship by Belgian Cavalry," "Butterfly Life" and "Alligator Farming."

Chaplin Burlesque of "Carmen" "Turns 'Em Away"

According to Management of Broadway Theatre, New York, Ten Thousand People See the Picture on First Night, and Police Reserves Were Called Out to Handle the Crowd

CHARLES CHAPLIN'S appearance as star of a four-reel burlesque of "Carmen," under the Essanay-V-L-S-E banner, drew record-breaking crowds to the Broadway theatre, New York, Sunday, April 9. Police reserves were called out to handle a throng which jammed the lobby, and obstructed the sidewalks and street for several blocks.

According to the theatre management, ten thousand people passed the portals of the Broadway to see the film on the opening day.

"Geraldine Farrar in 'Carmen' broke all records at the Strand for attendance," said Manager Langfeldt, of the Broadway. "Later Farrar came here in 'Temptation' and broke all previous records. There followed, some time later, Mary Pickford in 'Little Peppina,' and she established a high-water box office mark that stood alone until Chaplin came. Now Chaplin arrives, breaks all records for attendance by a double score, and turns thousands away."

Reports to the V-L-S-E from Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati and other important centres indicate that the new Chaplin film is playing to crowded houses at every performance.

"WOMAN OF IT" COMPANY DOES HOP, SKIP AND A JUMP TO LOCATIONS

In producing "The Woman of It" for Premo, Director Harley Knowles set about securing genuine settings for several scenes, leading his company successively to the Campus Restaurant, on Seventh avenue, New York, the Country Club at Saranac Lake, the New York Foundling Asylum, Keith's Union Square Theatre, and one of the outgoing ocean steamers.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE PLANS LARGE EXHIBIT IN NEW YORK

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, April 15.

Advertising matter pertaining to the first annual exposition of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America at New York in May has created much interest among the manufacturers of the West Coast and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. The latter organization, which is the largest representing the commercial interests of the West Coast film city, is making plans at this time in the hope of being able to have a large exhibit at the exposition.

This matter is in the hands of Industrial Commissioner Arthur W. Kinney. A number of manufacturers and producers are seriously considering taking space at the exposition, and it is probable that several of the best known film stars will make the trip to New York to be present.

PACEMAKER NOT ALLIED WITH ANY OTHER CONCERN, SAYS KOPFSTEIN

That the Pacemaker Company is not allied with any other film concern is the announcement of Jacques Kopfstein, its organizer.

"Contrary to the impression which seems to prevail in film circles," said Mr. Kopfstein, "the Pacemaker is an absolutely independent enterprise. It has been said, because the temporary offices of the new concern are located at 116 Nassau street, New York, which has housed one of the oldest manufacturers of pictures for a long term of years, that the Pacemaker is in some way connected with that concern.

"This is incorrect. The fact is that my own personal offices have been located there for about five years. As soon as our charter is granted, the Pacemaker Company will be located in one of the buildings devoted to the industry in the film district."

MONTREAL "U" EXCHANGE HAS VISITOR FROM "PARTS UNKNOWN"

The Montreal Universal Exchange had a visitor from "parts far distant" in the person of Mr. Smith, proprietor of several theatres in the Maritime Provinces, including the Itzit, of New Glasgow, and houses in Westville, N. S., the Jubilee, Stellarton and Crescent.

Mr. Smith stated that business conditions in Nova Scotia were quite satisfactory, and his house in New Glasgow, although only seating 435, was doing exceptionally well.

BORIES IS NOW WITH UNIVERSAL IN CALIFORNIA

Leon Bories, who has filled the position of manager at San Francisco for the General Film Company since this concern entered the California field, and who resigned but a few weeks ago, is now with the California Film Exchange, which distributes Universal releases.

He is acting as special representative in the Pacific Coast territory and will probably be given a managerial position.

Horsley Signs Swickard for New Brand of Dramas

Director Will Begin Production of Two-Reelers with Bostock Wild Animals Soon as He Picks Cast—Subjects Are Set for Release in May

CHARLES SWICKARD, long affiliated with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, at Inceville, Cal., has placed his signature on a contract to direct a new brand of dramas to be filmed at the David Horsley studios, Los Angeles. Mr. Swickard will begin work with the Horsley company immediately.

A company playing two-reel dramas, in which the Bostock wild animals will play a prominent part, will be under the direction of Mr. Swickard and work on the first picture, which will be released early in May. Work will start as soon as he picks a cast.

Director Swickard's experience is long and covers not alone the motion picture field, but extends far back into the legitimate drama. For many years he was director and supervisor of productions for many of the large theatrical concerns in the country, including many of the Sam Shubert productions and those of Daniel Frohman and Margaret Illington.

His best work while affiliated with the silent drama was done at Inceville, his rise to a place of recognition coming with the many successful pictures made while there. "The Conscience of John David," starring Crane Wilbur, who is also the author of the play, is a drama of many thrills. A scene in a burning wooden shack is probably the most outstanding. It pictures a most realistic fight between the star and Louis (Bull) Durham, the ex-New York Giants' pitcher, who is seen in the role of the "heavy."

In a smoke-filled room, with flames leaping all about them, the two Horsley players clash and for fully five minutes they fight and wrestle all over the place. It is not merely stage fire which is used in this scene, but the real article. The climax comes when Wilbur finally overpowers Durham, flings him to the sizzling floor and then dashes to the street.

On several other occasions throughout the five reels, Wilbur and Durham create thrills. One of them is when the two collide while riding horseback at top speed, and in this scene Durham was thrown high into the air, landing on his face, with the result that he bruised himself painfully.

A clash between Wilbur and Durham and several others in the cast on top of a freight car while it was in motion is still another.

Hundreds Wait in Line Hours for "Ne'er-Do-Well"

Management of Fine Arts Theatre in Chicago Is Forced to Give a "Midnight Matinee," Commencing at 11 P. M., to Accommodate Crowds on Opening Night

COL L. LESSER'S great feature, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," opened at the Fine Arts, Chicago, under the direction of Alfred Hamburger on Saturday evening, April 8.

At the opening hundreds stood in line for hours awaiting admission, and the management was forced to give a midnight matinee commencing at 11 p. m. to accommodate those still clamoring for admission, and even then hundreds were turned away. The prices were twenty-five cents to one dollar.

It is expected "The Ne'er-Do-Well" will play an all-summer run at this theatre.

Scarcely less significant is the reception of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" in Toledo, Ohio. With all street car lines suspended on account of a big strike, this production was opened at the Hippodrome theatre on April 2. Hundreds were turned away at the opening.

A telegram from the Hippodrome management says: "Opened with 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' today, and stood them in the street both afternoon and night. This with a railway dispute on, and not a car running; the best and most pleasing picture we have ever seen; broke all previous house records."

In Pittsburgh, at the Pitt theatre, a large and brilliant audience was on hand for the opening, with boxes full, upper and lower floors and gallery sold out at prices from twenty-five cents to one dollar.

An orchestra of twenty-five men, with ten men back of the stage working out sound effects, accompanied the attraction.

A set, representing the Pacific end of the Panama Canal, was erected as a stage setting. The stage was filled with tropical trees, plants, live monkeys, cockadoos, parrots and the like running about at random.

The picture is now in its third week, playing to successful business.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well" is also playing at the following theatres: Willis Wood theatre, Kansas City, where record breaking business for two weeks has been reported; three weeks at the Orpheum theatre, Cleveland; and two weeks at the Heilig theatre, Portland, Ore.

CANADIAN "U" BOOKS WAR PICTURE SOLID TO JUNE

The head office of the Canadian Universal Film Company at Toronto reports exceptionally heavy bookings on "The Dardanelles Expedition," it being booked solid to the end of May.

This is unusual in the case of a single reeler, but, of course, the subject is one of great interest to Canadians, showing, as it does, authentic pictures of that great adventure at Gallipoli.

Philadelphia, April 15.

"NEW YORK," a Pathé Gold Rooster feature, the fifth and last of the film cases taken into court by Congressman John H. K. Scott for the Fox and Pathé firms, was like its predecessors, "The Serpent," "The Fool's Revenge," "The Kreutzer Sonata" and "The Iron Claw," passed favorably by the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas number 2 recently.

Judges Barratt and Wessel ordered one change of title and the shortening of one scene in their final verdict, while the censors had ordered eight eliminations.

"New York" had been rejected on its first review by the censors unless material changes were made in the picture. On an appeal to them by the Pathé exchange this verdict stood.

As, in the opinion of the Pathé producers, these changes would ruin their picture not only artistically, but financially, an appeal was had to the courts.

Judge Barratt had at the last session of his court, when "Kreutzer Sonata" was on trial, told the censors to review "New York" once more to see if some agreement could not be reached between the contending parties and thus avoid the trial. This was done without avail.

The eliminations ordered were in brief: (1) The Poetry introducing the picture vividly describing the contrasts of New York life. (2) Any reference to illegitimacy. (3) Change subtitle, "Edna has artfully entwined herself in the affections of King and thus enjoys the luxuries he showers upon her" by inserting "through a secret marriage" after thus. This was one of the changes sustained by the judges. (4) Eliminate dance on table in supper scene. (5) Eliminate fall of Edna at this supper, where she rolls down steps and meets her death and flash of same; also scene of man catching girl's foot. (6) Shorten assault scene very materially. This scene the judges ordered shortened from its original length, but not nearly as short as ordered by the censors. (7) Cut out all showings of the baby clothes. (8) Shorten coffin scene. Judge Barratt, in his opinion, said he could see nothing wrong in the baby clothes. It is, however, one of the standards of the Pennsylvania censors that the showing of anything about approaching maternity tends to corrupt morals, so any such scene or one showing a newly-born baby in its mother's arms is ordered out of the films.

Deputy Attorney-General Kun and Chief Censor Breitinger conducted the case for the censors. Mr. Kun objected to the showing of the picture at all on the ground that the censors had not abused their discretion, but his contention was overruled by the judges and the picture thrown on the screen in the court room.

Pathé proved by its witnesses that the picture was taken with scarcely any change from a play "New York" which ran at the best theatres in the country several years ago.

The cost of the film was proved to be $60,000 and the loss by its exclusion in Pennsylvania was said to be $25,000.

It was also proved by witnesses that "New York" was being shown in all states without any eliminations, except some titles, which are not in the picture being viewed by the court.

Breitinger objected to any part of the cost of the production being shown. He even voiced an objection when Judge Barratt asked for the usual price per reel of a good feature.

Mr. Breitinger contended that the fall of the girl down the steps was the most immoral part of the picture, coming after the supper party in which the man picks her up in his arms and she falls out to her death. Judge Wessel said that to him this showed one of the morals of the picture in the swift retribution to the erring girl.

Mr. Breitinger made much of the fact that the National Board of Censors had ordered some eliminations from this picture and declared they were still in the print before the court. This was an error, however, as the Pathé company had cut out these scenes before sending any print out of their studio.

After the appeal of the Pathé company was sustained by Judges Barratt and Wessel the censors announced that they would take the case to the Supreme Court of the state.

Selig "Athletics" Set for First and Third Monday Releases, Beginning April 17

THE first reel of the Athletic series, which has been in course of production at the Selig studios, will be released Monday, April 17, and on the first and third Mondays of each month following. Contracts have been signed with several of the Loop theatres in Chicago.

These Athletic films were produced under the personal supervision of J. H. Herman, promoter of Athletic events. The first reel presents Yamada and Cutler, among the foremost exponents of the billiard cue, in a match game.

They also present a number of expert exhibition shots. Mike Gibbons, acknowledged peer of all middleweight champions, gives a boxing exhibition, and shows the methods he utilizes in keeping himself in trim.

His marvelous speed in the ring is shown in a three-round bout. In the first reel of the Athletic series, Fred Dalkus, the heavyweight champion wrestler, and Dr. B. F. Roller, who has a world-wide reputation as a wrestler, participate in a finish match.

Bookings can be made by applying directly to the Selig Company, Chicago, Ill. These Athletic series are somewhat of an innovation, teaching as they do the art of self defense and stimulating interest in feats of skill and the laws of health.

STAGE AND SCREEN AGENT ISSUES "AT LIBERTY" BULLETIN

Edward Small, representative of a number of players for photoplay, dramatic, musical comedy and stock productions, has begun the publication of a weekly bulletin from his offices at 1493 Broadway, New York.

The bulletin is of four pages, neatly printed and well illustrated, and contains a description of the Small system, besides the names of the artists available to screen and stage through negotiation with the Edward Small offices.

"THE CRIPPLED HAND"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture is enhanced by some wonderful light effects and miraculous dissolves and double exposures. It is a prominent example of the power of the camera, its ability to create illusion without revealing its mechanics.

In respect to story, "The Crippled Hand" is very different from the usual run of features. It is light and pretty. The central figure is a modern Cinderella, in name only, for the plot is modern and nothing like the fairy tale except for some of its characters. But there are parts of the fairy tale pictured at length—we should say that such scenes occupied fully a reel of the five. The action is slow and keyed evenly low throughout most of its length. The one powerful point arrives at the introduction of those scenes which form the denouement.

In fact "The Crippled Hand" might be defined as a picture with a big appeal for the little folks and an unusual appeal to the grown-ups if they want to forsake sensational action for a day and witness vastly pretty scenes, artistically lighted and extraordinarily well set.

The light effects, the double exposures, the unruffled dissolves, the accuracy and lavishness of costumes and properties in the Cinderella portions—all unite to make the picture the colorful work it is.

The story, as we have said, moves slowly. It is of Calder Johnstone's construction while Robert Leonard transcribed it to scenario form and was assisted in the direction by David Kirkland.

The angel back of the show becomes acquainted with a little shop girl. A publicity scheme is evolved to boom the opening of the show. The management announces that the girl whose foot fits a certain slipper will be given a position in the chorus. The little girl, of course, wins the contest.

On the opening night she is stage struck and takes refuge in the star's dressing room. After the show the star, who boasts of a checkered past, entices the angel to her room. She throws herself in his arms, but he seeing a vision of the little shop girl throws her from him.

Immediately afterwards the star is attacked by a musician whose life she ruined. The little girl prevents a murder and the star is brought to a realization of her duty, which is caring for the crippled musician. The girl has found her true Prince in the show's backer.

The Cinderella scenes are introduced by way of the little girl's dreams. Ella Hall is perfectly at home in this part, and shows her usual appreciation of her role. Robert Leonard is the angel. Gladys Brockwell is a most convincing and alluring musical show star while Marc Robbins, Kingsley, Benedict, Betty Schade and Carmen Phillips register effectively in smaller parts.

"CIVILIZATION'S CHILD"

(Triangle-Kay Bee—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

LESS original in its conception than the recent series of strong dramatic subjects from the Ince studios, and less fortunate in its handling, this picture, nevertheless, will interest picture-goers who like heart interest themes of underworld life.

The action centers about Berna, a girl of the Russian wilds, whose first taste of civilization is a Cossack massacre. She comes to America, falls into the clutches of Boss McManus, a despicable character, and then becomes a woman of the streets. After helping a young violinist to get on his feet, she abandons her old life and becomes his wife and the mother of his child.

The daughter of the Boss falls in love with the violinist, and gets her father to "frame up" Berna. The divorce suit is tried before McManus, now a judge. When Berna confronts him, her betrayer, she makes a scene and is sent to jail for disorderly conduct. When she gets out, she finds her baby has been given into the custody of the violinist. She goes to the home of McManus, kills him and then drops dead.

Anna Lehr has the role of Berna, and succeeds in making it convincing, so far as arousing sympathy is concerned; William H.

THE BOSS AGREES TO HIS DAUGHTER'S SCHEME

Thompson gives a fine rendition of the Boss, and Dorothy Dalton is quite good as his heartless daughter; Jack Standing, as the violinist, is fair. Others are Clyde Benson, J. P. Lockney and J. Barney Sherry.

The usual skill of Ince directors in giving their pictures correct atmosphere, and effective settings, is at hand here in the work of Charles Giblyn. The management of the massacre scenes is excellent.

Summed up, we should say "Civilization's Child" belongs to the order of melodramas. It is well produced, but none too satisfying as to its story.

"FEATHERTOP"

(Gaumont-Mutual Masterpicture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

MARGUERITE COURTOT, always a pretty girl on the screen, has never screened so attractively as she does in this subject. This is in spite of the fact that she is given little real opportunity. The few feet of advance announcement, added to the last Gaumont release, showed Miss Marguerite in the costume of the Louis Fifteenth period much more attractively than she was given a chance to appear in the few short scenes from Mr. Hawthorne's book.

The story of this picture only incidentally and briefly concerns the celebrated novel of Hawthorne. The acting of Gerald Griffin and the face of Miss Marguerite bring it into a place beside pictures which are worthy the attention of the exhibitor.

UNCLE DICK "ENJOYS" THE OPERA

The plot is old, and the characters are those which we have long loved. Three brothers, one an unhappy, childless millionaire, and one a sea captain, living with his wife in the South Seas, and one growing wonderful flowers at the old homestead, are introduced. The latter has a beautiful young daughter, Elsie, who is attracted by city ways, and goes to spend a few weeks with the millionaire uncle.

While she is there her father dies. Then her uncle, disgusted with "society," disappears, and makes it appear that he is dead, leaving to his seafarinng brother his estate, on condition that he live in the Fifth avenue mansion, and leaving to Elsie, whom he has seen grow away from her country sweetheart, and favor a city fop, a copy of Mr. Hawthorne's "Feathertop."

Considerable comedy is provided when Uncle Dick and Aunt Sarah arrive and enter city society, but Uncle Dick is not fooled about young Percy Morleigh's pursuit of Elsie. By inducing Elsie to read "Feathertop," he convinces the girl of Percy's true character, and of the stability of the "society" which has flocked around the standard of their wealth, and eventually persuades Elsie to go back with him and Aunt Sarah to the South Sea islands.

By moving from the Fifth avenue mansion, Uncle Dick forfeits the fortune to Elsie, and in order to make her worthy of it, reconciles her to her old country sweetheart. Then a hand on the ship removes his false beard, and reveals the millionaire uncle, who has found happiness at last and goes with the party to the South Seas.

James Levering, Mathilde Baring, Charles Graham, John Reinhard and Sydney Mason are other acceptable members of the cast. The picture was directed by Henry Vernot.

"THE LOVE MASK"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

A GOOD western picture, poorly named, it seems to us, would be a fair description of this offering. Although the picture contains nothing new, either in plot or presentation, yet it would be difficult to pick flaws with it, for it is human in its appeal, and its box-office value should be high.

It bears the stamp of the name of De Mille, and yet the story is scarcely logical or believable. This trifling fault is overcome in large measure by the excellence of the cast and the scenes selected as a surrounding for the work of the company. The whole story is laid in the California mountains, in the stirring days of '49, but, although many a story has had this locale in the last few months, none has been better presented, nor have more striking locations been photographed.

Much of the attractiveness of the picture is due to the work of Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid. Earle Foxe, as a highwayman, does his best, but he has been miscast. Our personal armory is rusty, but we wouldn't be afraid to face Earle on any lonely road at any hour.

Cleo Ridgely is a woman prospector, who finds gold after many disappointments, and then her claim is "jumped" by a band of four big strong men. She calls in the handsome young sheriff (Wallace Reid), but he can do nothing. So she conspires with "Silver Spurs," a noted bandit, to hold up the stage coach on which the claim jumpers are shipping their stolen gold.

Cleo fails to get the gold, and goes to the Red Dog Saloon after it, holding up the saloon. The Sheriff captures and unmasks her, and finds that she is the girl he has long loved. He defends her in a hastily-arranged trial, and while she is being heard, the real bandit sneaks into the saloon and gets the gold.

There are a number of highly active side-features, such as an attack on the girl's cabin by the men who jumped the claim, and a battle with the bandit, in which all the thieves are killed. These scenes are very well staged, indeed.

Robert Fleming and Dorothy Abril handle difficult character parts in good shape.

"THE GREATER WRONG"

(Lubin-Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THOUGH this picture works upon old material, it is unusually well acted by a cast composed of Leslie Austen, Octavia Handworth, Margaret Adair, and Herbert Fortier. The direction by George W. Terwilliger is as good as the work of the players, and contains more than one clever touch.

Mr. Terwilliger tells his story in a straightforward manner, and does not hesitate to be frank when he considers it necessary. This frankness, however, is mixed with good taste, and produces strong situations without offense. The theme pivots upon James Cannon's marriage to a wealthy heiress solely for her money; his virtual desertion of her, the death of their child, and the adoption by Mrs. Cannon of the illegitimate child of Cannon and his stenographer.

THE QUARREL

Not until the substituted child has grown to young womanhood, does Mrs. Cannon learn the truth. Then Cannon confesses, his wife forgives him, and all ends happily.

Miss Handworth is particularly pleasing in a difficult role, and the other members of the cast carry their parts well indeed. The action is close knit. Surprisingly few superfluous scenes are used, and the general effect is quite dramatic. Lighting, photography and sets are excellent.

"ARTIE, THE MILLIONAIRE KID"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon-V. L. S. E.—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

THIS comedy centers about the escapades of a youth, who, after his expulsion from college and a row with his father, goes to a rural community, buys a newspaper, gets possession of a piece of land through which his father's railroad is to run, and sells the land to the old man for a cool million. Incidentally, of course, he wins the girl.

Although the material at hand was too thin for five reels, and although the story is distinctly juvenile in its general tenor, the picture has enough character comedy, and a sufficient number of complications to make it interesting.

Ernest Truex, featured in the role of Artie, looks the part, and acts it in a pleasing and effective manner. Dorothy Kelly, as Annabelle, the country girl, is very good in a rather slender part; John T. Kelly shines to advantage as Artie's dad; William Dunn does a bit of superior work as a "nut" detective; Albert Roccardi is satisfactory as Uriah Updike, and Etienne Girardot as a college chum of Artie's who helps along Artie's scheme by impersonating a rich widow, is thoroughly satisfactory.

Much of the fun arises from this impersonation, especially as it makes possible a lot of "hick" town comedy. The aged rubes, Updike in particular, vie with each other in their attentions to the "widow," and there are many laughs at their expense. Not until the very end does the "widow's" disguise come off, revealing a bald and homely man. This idea, while not new to the screen, is still good for funmaking.

Settings and types are excellent, and there are other evidences of careful direction by Harry Handworth.

"HAUNTED" AND "SOME DETECTIVE"

(E. and R. Jungle Film Company)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"HAUNTED," one of the latest comedies produced by the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, featuring the chimpanzees, Napoleon and Sally, is the best of the product of this concern to date. Besides possessing novelty in the shape of its stars, it presents a humorous story that is pictured in an advantageous manner.

The scenario was contributed by Frances Willey, and to the author's credit, Napoleon and Sally are not forced to bear the burden of producing all the laughs. The chimpanzees are funny and they are novel but without a good story they are lost. With a good story they are in their element, and "Haunted" furnishes them this necessary background.

The story tells of a newly married couple who sublet a bungalow for the period of their honeymoon. An actor out of work loses his helpmates, Napoleon and Sally, who wander to this selfsame bungalow and enter unobserved by the humans. Throughout the period of their presence in the house they frighten the married pair out of their wits by resorting to numerous ghostly tricks nicely furnished them by the author. The arrival of the actor, of course, clears up the situation and ends the reel.

Lillian Brown Leighton and Ralph McComas are most active in the human end of the cast. The direction particularly as applied to the chimpanzees shows marked improvement over the former releases. The photography and settings are adequate.

"Some Detective" shows the manner in which a sleuth uses the chimpanzees to spoil his rival's chances with the widow. Frances Willey also prepared this story, and it makes a fair picture, although Napoleon and Sally have not been given a generous amount of opportunities, nor has the plot been worked out with any startling degree of clarity.

It has some humor in it, however, and Lillian Brown Leighton and Ralph McComas again prove valuable in the support of the chimpanzees.

"THE TORRENT OF VENGEANCE"

(Bison-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HENRY McRAE has taken advantage of the recent western floods and produced herein a picture that throws all past thrillers in the shade. Combined with those flood scenes which are enough to create a mild sensation in themselves he has interwoven a series of thrilling bits of action, as for instance a bridge caving in, throwing an automobile and two passengers into the water. A full view of this is provided, taken from a slight elevation so that every detail of it is discernible. Then there are several large explosions, a hair-raising fall in which horse and rider pitch headlong to the ground and any number of heated fistic encounters.

McRae's story is not so wonderful but here's a case in which the vehicle employed for the presentation of the thrillers needs merely a faint story to hold the entire fabric together. There is enough of a plot to give justification to the startling episodes, which is in this case all that is necessary.

Lee Hill is the hero, but the rest of the cast is composed of strangers to Universal pictures. The photography is adequate while there are no interiors of any consequence.

FOX PLAYS SHOWN TO PRISON AUDIENCES IN OREGON, WASHINGTON AND NEW YORK

THEDA BARA during the current winter has played film engagements in the Oregon, Washington and New York state prisons, and as each new Bara film has been released behind the bars a lusty demand has gone up for her reappearance.

In Washington, too, William Farnum has become a prison favorite, and his appearance in "The Plunderer," "The Nigger," "A Soldier's Oath" and "Fighting Blood" have resulted in demonstrations of approval.

During the present winter Miss Bara has appeared, via film, at Sing Sing, Auburn and Great Meadows prisons, New York state, in "Lady Audley's Secret," "The Two Orphans," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Serpent." In addition to these the following Fox features have been presented in the same prisons: "Princess Romanoff," "Blue Blood and Red," "Merely Mary Ann," "The Unfaithful Wife" and "Destruction."

LOOKING AT "FEATHERTOP," A GAUMONT-MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE, WITH MARGUERITE COURTOT

"BY WHOSE HAND?"

(Equitable-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is an unusual story, with a mysterious ending, which leaves the audience to decide "who is guilty?" Moreover, it is excellently produced and acted by a capable company, which includes Edna Wallace Hopper, Muriel Ostriche and Charles J. Ross, whose names should have a strong drawing power. Charming exterior scenes are supplemented by elaborate interiors which establish a convincing atmosphere.

The dramatic unities appear to have been carefully weighed, and from an artistic standpoint the picture is a success. It should prove an equal success from the box-office standpoint.

The story revolves around the Maitlands, a wealthy family of man, wife and young daughter, Helen. Helen is loved by Sterling, superintendent of the estate, but Maitland tells the young man he must show him $5,000 to prove he has "made good" before he can consent to the marriage.

Sterling is perfecting an invention; he shows the machine to Simon Baird, a wealthy land owner, who picks some minor flaw with it, and then flaunts $5,000 before Sterling's eyes, telling him he was ready to pay that much if the machine had been perfect. Baird is induced to stay at the home that night while alterations are being made. In the morning he is found murdered, and the $5,000 is in Sterling's possession.

At the trial a lot of past history of the Maitland family comes to light. Baird has been a partner of Maitland in a mining venture years before and had robbed him of his share. It also develops that Baird had known and wronged Mrs. Maitland when she was a singer. She confesses to the murder, saying that she had taken the money which Baird had denied her in other times when she was in dire need, and had loaned it to Sterling, whose suit for Helen's hand she favored. Sterling comes to the rescue and declares he murdered Baird himself. The audience is left to decide whether Mrs. Maitland's confession was made merely to save Sterling, or whether he is the real murderer.

The story is the work of Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. It was staged by James Durkin. Others in the cast are Nicholas Duneaw, John Dillon and James Ryley.

"THE FIRES OF JOHANNIS"

(Lubin-V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ADAPTED from the play by Herman Sudermann and directed by Edgar Lewis, this picture resolves itself into a slowly moving story of sorrowful import, with Nance O'Neil as the star.

Miss O'Neil assumes two utterly different roles: Zirah, a dissolute old gypsy, and Marika, her daughter, who is adopted and brought up by a family of wealthy country people. Her characterization of each is remarkably well done. In fact, it is her work, combined with that of her director, which guarantees the appeal of the picture as a whole.

The denouement is intensely gloomy, but powerful in its logic. Here the daughter sees her mother die in prison as the result of a life of filth and debauchery, crying for a last drink to ease her suffering. This the daughter withholds in order that her mother may die clean. Miss ONeil's delineation of the two roles in this scene reaches a high plane of emotional acting.

Likewise, the scenes wherein Marika realizes the hopelessness of her love for George, who had been her boyhood sweetheart, constitute another strong emotional climax.

The supporting cast is thoroughly competent, and includes George Clarke, Eleanor Barry, Ethel Tully, Victor Sutherland, Irving Dillon, Mrs. Carr, James Cassady, and two clever child players, Violet Exzell and Rosemary Carr.

THE GYPSY SELLS HER BABY

The atmosphere is rural throughout, and as one might expect from a director of Lewis' caliber, the settings and locations are right in every case. Some effective night scenes, representing the celebration of St. John's Eve, lend a touch of unusual color.

"The Fires of Johannis" is quite certain to please audiences who like pictures of tense heart interest.

METROPOLITAN MOTION PICTURE COMPANY IS FORMED IN LOS ANGELES

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, April 15.

ANOTHER producing organization has been added to the Los Angeles colony. The Metropolitan Motion Picture Company has leased the America Europa studio on Allesandro street and begun the production of one-reel light comedies under the direction of James Schneider, from scenarios by H. M. Gardner.

The company is backed by local capital and W. A. Norton is president and general manager. Carl Von Schiller, who, following a number of years on the speaking stage, entered pictures about four years ago and has since been with Lubin, Morosco, Universal and American companies, has been selected as leading man. Dixie Chene, who has been with the Keystone Company, playing leading women parts for the past two years, and Ethelyn Bray, who had a number of good parts on the speaking stage in star productions and has appeared in productions of the Essanay, American, Universal and Morosco subjects, have both been engaged. The director has been affiliated with the Keystone and David Horsley studios.

The Metropolitan Company has a tentative release with the Universal Company and will confine its endeavors to the making of one-reel subjects with comedy situations.

ILLUSTRATING THE FAIRY TALE SCENES IN "THE CHILDREN IN THE HOUSE," FINE ARTS-TRIANGLE, WITH NORMA TALMADGE

"THE CHILDREN IN THE HOUSE"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, working from a script by Roy Summerville, have built a thoroughly human offering, interesting at all points, and quite broad in its appeal. It comprehends a version of the eternal triangle, a fairy tale, and a "crook" subplot, all these being woven into a convincing drama. Besides, it is admirably produced, from a technical standpoint, and the acting is unusually good.

The spectacle of a wife, neglected by a husband who is in the toils of a second woman—this time a dancer—is not new to the screen, but it is presented here in a wholesome manner. The wife exasperated by her husband's follies, is about to go away with the man she really loves when her children appear on the scene, and the elopment is declared off. Meanwhile, the husband aids a band of crooks to rob his father's bank. The robbery is successfully carried out, and then the crooks are forced to take refuge in an old house, where they are discovered by a crowd of children who go there to play. They are imprisoned in the house by the crooks, who set it on fire. In the end, the husband is killed by police chasing the band in an automobile, and the rest of the thieves, including the dancer, plunge over a cliff. The children are, of course, rescued.

Norma Talmadge, as the neglected wife, is excellent, playing her part in a sympathetic and appealing fashion; William Hinckley renders a skillful impersonation of the high-principled lover; Eugene Pallette draws a conventionally correct sketch of the husband, as does Jewel Carman of the dancer. Others in an entirely competent cast are Alice Rae, W. E. Lawrence, George Pearce, Walter Long, and Alva D. Blake.

The children—George Stone, Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, Francis Carpenter and Ninon Fovieri—deserve especial mention because they perform well, and add immensely to the conviction carried by the story.

The introduction of the fairy tale, besides affording some beautiful forest settings, adds a pleasing touch of fancy, and serves also to explain, in an allegorical way, why the wife did not marry the sweetheart of her youth.

Some splendid night photography is shown in several scenes. Settings and locations are right.

"HIS LAST LAUGH"

(Triangle-Keystone—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ACCUSTOMED as we are to rapid action and clever tricks in Keystones, it is surprising to find in this subject an almost total absence of both. The picture opens very nearly as a drama would, and never reaches a high state of merriment, although the plot is well constructed, and at times is quite interesting.

There is a lack of vitality in subtitles, acting and business which probably is responsible for the few laughs. Harry McCoy is seen as a penniless Count, who is reduced to playing a piano in a cabaret, and his work does not get over very effectively; Julia Faye appears as his sweetheart; Mary Thurman as a wealthy maiden; Joseph Callahan as her father; Billie Bennett as her mother, and Sutherland Ring as her suitor. There are also Dave Anderson, as a crook, and Lige Crommie, as his pal.

At one point the story drops back into ancient costume days for the purpose of showing antics of the Count's ancestors, and supplying a motive for the crooks' pursuit of some supposed buried treasure. On the back of a portrait of one of the Count's ancestors they find directions for finding the treasure, and complete the search after they have stolen a ring from the rich girl, and a piece of jewelry from the Count. But the treasure turns out to be a script on which is written a stale joke.

A couple of stunts of the typical Keystone sort enliven the picture, but they would fit a dramatic offering about as well as a comedy. Walter Wright directed and looked after all details carefully.

"THE SOCIAL HIGHWAYMAN"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY HARVEY F. THEW

THIS is a picturization of the play presented with great success by Richard Mansfield, some years ago. In transferring it to the screen, none of its dramatic intensity has been lost—in fact, the advantages of the camera over the ordinary stage setting are emphasized. The story contains a great deal of excitement, suspense and surprise, all valuable elements in a picture, and these have been well handled and assembled.

A house of mystery has been provided, full of sliding mantelpieces, secret exits and entrances, hidden panels and safes. Although these features are scarcely new, they are used for the introduction of a number of unique situations, and by means of them, interest and suspense are maintained at a rather keen pitch.

Edwin August, the director, also plays the two leading parts. In the principal of these he is Sir Curtis Jaffray, an Englishman, living in New York. He has inherited a tendency to thieving, but he confines this to thefts from the rich, the proceeds of which he gives to the poor.

He operates fearlessly at New York and Palm Beach, and is finally suspected by a Countess, who keeps her eye on him. In the meantime he discovers that the Countess herself has a "past"; that she was an accessory in the supposed murder of her first husband, who is now acting as Sir Curtis's assistant.

When the Countess comes to tell the social highwayman that she knows his identity, and demands a share in the profits, he triumphs by introducing the man she thought she had helped murder. This quiets the Countess, but Sir Curtis is eventually run down. He evades the officers sent to arrest him, flees to the home of his fiance and is there surrounded in a closet. He is killed by a policeman who fires through the door of the closet.

Ormi Hawley is a charming and clever co-star. John Sainpolis gives some of his usual excellent work, and Alice Clair Elliott and Noah Beery also furnish capable portrayals.

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IF we may distinguish between a story as a series of purely interesting events, and a plot as a series of dramatic episodes, then "Molly Make-Believe" has no plot. It is just a story, with no climaxes, and as some would say, it is sweet and pretty. There is no suspense in the picture, the conclusion is foregone after the beginning of the second reel.

"Molly Make-Believe" disregards realism; coincidence there is aplenty. The story is fantastical; it seldom comes down to harsh realities. It is really "make-believe" in its major aspect from opening to close.

So much for the character of the picture. In its production J. Searle Dawley has done creditable work. He has shown his players to full advantage. His light effects merit praise, particularly the manner in which the scenes staged in a train are handled from this point of view. The scenes are well laid and the photography good. The results of a train wreck are shown. This is obviously the result of a real wreck and they are welded in with the enacted scenes excellently.

To our way of thinking the picture will go exceedingly well at a children's matinee, for it has much in it that will appeal greatly to minors, such as the fairy tale aspect of the entire affair, the little boy, Master Dick Gray, who is prominent in the cast, and the clever dog, Merry, who is a fine actor.

Grown-ups who are tired of rapid melodrama, shootings and killings, betrayings and unfaithful wives will doubtless enjoy the simplicity and charm, the humor and the vein of pathos of Molly's experiences; and then there is Marguerite Clark, who is an actress.

Miss Clark, in the title part, makes a splendid and attravtive little girl. She is always pretty to look upon, even though the scenario of Eleanor Hallowell's story gives her only a few opportunities to display her ability.

Mahlon Hamilton as the society man who is cheered by Molly when his financee has practically forsaken him, and Gertrude Norman, as Molly's grandmother, have the other chief roles. Helen Dahl, Edwin Mordant and J. W. Johnston complete the cast.

The main idea results from the establishment of Molly's "Serial Letter Company." She furnishes real letters from imaginary people to all her customers, and the society man employs her just for the fun of it. The result of this and of one or two meetings between the two is a happily concluded story. This theme is elaborated by the introduction of other customers of Molly, one a little girl who dies. The humor introduced is of a most gentle variety.

"THE MILLIONAIRE PLUNGER"

(Kalem—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

IN this, the fifth of the "Social Pirates" series, the two girls Mona and Mary (Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby) add to their already notable achievement by reimbursing a poor laundress who had been swindled into giving up her savings for some worthless stock.

Thomlinson Gerry (B. Furey) whose father made his millions by unscrupulous dealing in worthless stocks, is approached by one of the victims in the person of a poor laundress, only to be refused redress.

The two girls to whom she has told her story make up their minds to take up her case, and by a clever scheme manage to separate quite a sum of money from Gerry and give it to her as coming from him in payment of his father's wrong.

The acting of the entire supporting cast is to be favorably commented on, and the interior settings leave nothing to be desired for complete realism.

THE TRAP IS BEING SET

Deering (Frank Jonasson) makes a good impression as the dissatisfied telegrapher, and the set showing the fake poolroom where the advance information on the result of the races is to be utilized, is well worked out.

There is not a moment in the entire two reels where interest lags, and the producers are to be complimented on the way the interest is keeping up in this series.

"The Millionaire Plunger" is one of the best so far, and George Bronson-Howard, the author, is certainly keeping up his good work.

James W. Horne, as director, and George Bronson-Howard, as author, are a good combination.

Special commendation should be given for the wonderfully realistic shooting scene, where the two girls are supposedly shot.

It is almost too real, and provides an exceptional thrill.

"NAPOLEON" AND "SALLY" IN SCENES FROM THREE NEW E. AND R. JUNGLE COMEDIES: "IN DUTCH," "FATHER'S BABY," AND "TWIN CUPIDS"

"WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?"

(Universal Special—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

ANNOUNCED in an introductory subtitle as a document on the subject of birth control, this picture is resolved, in its main theme into an attack upon the avoidance of motherhood.

The central figure is a district attorney, whose wife, unknown to him, enlists the help of a criminal in escaping motherhood, despite the fact that her husband desires children intensely. After the wife has introduced one of her women friends to this person, with the usual result, the wife's brother comes to visit her, and wrongs the daughter of the housekeeper. Then the wife gives him the name of the criminal, to whom he takes the girl. But the criminal bungles this time, and the girl dies.

The criminal is placed on trial by the District Attorney, and gets fifteen years for his crime. Just as he is leaving the courtroom, after his sentence, he counsels the District Attorney to look after his own household before he prosecutes others. Then it is that the District Attorney learns by reading the criminal's ledger, what his wife has been doing. When he reaches home, he finds his wife surrounded by her women acquaintances, and he drives them out of his house with the statement: "I ought to prosecute all of you for manslaughter, but instead I will content myself with asking you to leave my house."

Turning to his wife, he asks: "Where are my children?" Two scenes at the close of the picture show what their home might have been.

This is the purport of the story, in general. At the beginning, however, a line of action is shown regarding the subject of birth control with reference to the poor.

So far as this part of the picture has any value in a dramtic sense, it is apparently designed to contribute to the general theme—"unwanted" children." It must be said, however, that this contrast is not clearly defined, and does not add anything significant to the picture as a whole.

There is no doubt that the production will have, upon persons of mature mind, the effect of a sermon. It is well acted by a cast of thorough capability, headed by Tyrone Power. His work is excellent, and is chiefly responsible for the good effect of the piece as a whole. Details of production were carefully looked after, and except for poor lighting in several scenes, are entirely satisfactory.

"THE STAIN IN THE BLOOD"

(Signal-Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

THIS is a Western, a crook play and a problem play rolled into one. The story may be divided into three periods. First there is shown a migrating family traveling in a prairie schooner across the plains in search of a homestead. An Indian uprising takes place, and the Redskins (the Fennimore Cooper kind) massacre the parents, while Mary and Dick, the little boy and girl, escape.

Next we see the children in their twenties, the wards of a Western town sheriff. This gives an opportunity to introduce the dance and gambling hell, broncho busting and other frontier amusements, irrevelant perhaps, but vastly entertaining to those who like to see the woolley, pioneer times re-enacted on the celluloid. The sheriff is doing his best to catch the reckless lone bandit who is terrorizing the community. The hold-up artist is finally shot, but escapes. It appears that he is none other than Dick, the sheriff's ward. Accompanied by Mary, Dick takes a train for the East, and to avoid suspicion, they register at a hotel as man and wife. But Dick is captured and sentenced to twenty years.

Next comes the third period. Mary is married to a self-made man, who spends much of his time with ladies of the half world. Dick escapes from prison and is the leader of a second-story gang. Mary's husband is particularly interested in Alys, a cabaret entertainer. This girl happened to be in the hotel lobby when Dick and Mary registered, and, hoping to alienate Mary from her husband, she tells him of the incident, giving it the worst interpretation. Without giving Mary a chance to explain, her husband at once starts divorce proceedings.

By chance Dick picks out his sister's house for a robbery, the police surround the place, and in the ensuing melee Mary is wounded. Her husband comes in, and she is permitted to explain the registering episode. Amid mutual vows to lead better lives, the reunited couple embrace. Dick is lead away to jail, there to find solace in the Scriptures.

Much of this story taxes the credulity, but the spectator is prone to be indulgent, because the tale furnishes interesting and varigated action. The director was constantly on the alert to strengthen the various scenes, and got in some very creditable touches. Edythe Sterling, Norbert Myles and Murdock MacQuarrie, the principals, have fair support, and their own efforts show considerable care.

"AT PINEY RIDGE"

(Selig-V-L-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

A STRIKING example of the screen's scenic supremacy over the speaking stage is afforded here. When David K. Higgins' play, which furnished the material of this film, was originally produced, only three or four scenes could be shown. But here we have scores of interiors and exteriors, among the latter some very close approximations of the Tennessee Mountains, which furnish the locale of the story.

The plot is an involved tangle of old-fashioned melodrama, developing a series of improbable but forceful episodes. While the action loiters in most leisurely fashion at times, it usually whirls from one incident to another, requiring great mental agillity to keep up with it. Although some of the climaxes might have been worked up to a higher pitch, the unusual amount of suspense involved constantly challenges speculation regarding the outcome.

One pair of leads gains ultimate happiness, but another pair are left in an enigmatic state at the end. This quasi-tragedy adds a good touch of reality and softens some of the preceding artificiality.

A large number of players are prominent in the cast. Vivian Reed is always charming as the ingenue, and Leo Pierson is a nimble-witted hero. Fritzie Brunette, in the part of a betrayed mountain girl, arouses sympathy, while Edward J. Piel's portrayal of cold-blooded villainy is correspondingly repugnant. Other players deserving mention are Al Filson, Frank Clark, James Bradbury, William Scott and Lillian Hayward.

Mark Brierson, cashier of a small town bank, has ruined and deserted Cindy Lane, a simple mountain girl. Since he hopes to marry Azalia Deering, daughter of the owner of the bank, he refuses to marry Cindy. Through his speculation, the bank is on the verge of ruin, but Jack Rose, a wealthy young planter, puts up enough money to save it. A child is born to Cindy, and her father swears to shoot the man who wronged her.

When Brierson sees that Rose is likely to win Azalia's love, he leads Cindy's father to believe that Rose is the seducer of his daughter. Later, when Azalia's engagement to Rose is announced, Brierson persuades an octoroon to claim Rose as her son. After many vicissitudes Rose proves that Brierson is Cindy's betrayer, and that he is also the octoroon's son. While he is embracing Azalia Brierson is killed by Lane.

"A MODERN THELMA"

(William Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY OSCAR COOPER

UPON Marie Corelli's famous novel as a foundation, a pleasing and effective photoplay structure has been built here, with Vivian Martin in the role of the little Norwegian girl, whose marriage to Sir Philip makes her the object of a plot by one of the lord's admirers. It is a part which fits Miss Martin well, indeed, particularly in the first half of the action.

The picture, in fact, divides easily into two episodes: the romantic courtship and marriage of Thelma and Sir Philip in Norway, and their subsequent life in England, with a brief return to Norway for the final reconciliation. The action is well handled throughout, and is one of the evidences of the superior direction which the piece received at the hands of Director John Adolfi, and his assistant, John W. Kellette.

The locations for the Norwegian scenes are remarkably appropriate, supplying some beautiful backgrounds, descriptive of both summer and winter. The director demonstrates more than once his knowledge of just what can be done with the camera, as, for example, the scene showing the faces of Thelma and Sir Philip reflected in a lake. Other touches of this sort serve to enhance greatly the conviction carried by the subject as a whole.

In other respects, also, this subject is excellent. We refer especially to the work of the cast, which is, without exception, one of the best balanced we have ever seen in a Fox production. There is Harry Hilliard, whose performance as Sir Philip is truly expressive and thoroughly convincing; William H. Tooker gives an excellent rendition of Thelma's father, and heads the list of unusual character impersonations, of which there are several. Albert Roccardi, Maud Sinclair, Elizabeth Kennedy, Allen Walker, Stuart Russell, Albert Tovell, Richard Neill, Pauline Barry, Flora Nason, Lilie Leslie and Gladys Wayne are other members of this efficient cast. If one were to single out for praise any of them, he would perhaps pick Neill, Miss Leslie and Roccardi.

We shall not, of course, presume to outline the story of "Thelma" here, but will merely remark that the Corelli novel has been departed from whenever the picture makers thought it necessary.

As it stands, the picture is a good one, made so principally by the excellent and intelligent direction it received.

"THE RANGER LINE"

(Essanay—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY 2nd

EVERYONE knows the story of the girl who was good in amateur theatricals, got a "bit" on the professional stage, secretly learned all the parts, and on the opening night filled the breach made by the leading woman's absence, and scored a smashing hit. This plot has become a favorite classic, and doubtless will continue to be popular because so many people cherish a notion that they could do the same thing themselves. The writer of this film's scenario trusted almost entirely to the oft-tested strength of this story, and did not adulterate it with any radical twists or complications.

This does not mean that there is no interest created by the shifting fortunes of the characters, however, for, while one can guess the outcome pretty accurately, it is not so certain how it is to be achieved. Elizabeth Burbridge's part allows her to register more joy than sorrow, fortunately, for she is more interesting and natural when smiling. Edward Arnold makes an excellent hero, and Richardson Cotton is very good in a character role. The settings and photography are adequate.

THE PROPOSAL

Owing to the death of her father, it is necessary for Rose Lane to become a typist, and she is forced to abandon her hope of becoming an actress. She is engaged by Jermaine, a theatrical producer. One of Jermaine's stars, Herriman, has seen Rose in college dramatics, and recommends that she be given a small part in the play about to be produced. The director and leading woman, for different reasons, conspire to have Rose discharged. When Jermaine discovers the plot he dismisses the conspirators, gives Rose the leading part, and the play is a success. To add to Rose's joy in the successful premiere, Herriman proposes to her, and they are married.

MONTREAL TURNS OUT TO SEE BUSHMAN AND BEVERLY BAYNE

Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Montreal, P. Q., April 15.

CONSIDERABLE enthusiasm was displayed in Montreal during the visit of Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Helen Dunbar and Robert Cummings. Probably there are no screen stars more popular in Montreal and Quebec than Bushman and Bayne, and the motion picture public were very glad to seize the opportunity afforded by the Starfilms, Ltd., of seeing and hearing these favorites. On the arrival of the train at the station, the Metro stars found not only a cheering crowd of admirers but a throng of exhibitors, and a military band. A procession was formed through the streets to the headquarters of the Starfilms, Ltd., there being plenty of enthusiasm all along the route. At the Starfilms, Ltd., a reception was held and the visitors introduced to the members of the press and exhibitors. A ball was held at the Highlander's Armory. Bushman and Miss Bayne headed the Grand March, and handsome canes were presented to Bushman and Cummings by the exhibitors.

TABLOID REVIEWS FOR THE BUSY EXHIBITOR

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Little Samaritan." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., April 25.)—Not shown for review; the story follows. Joyce Farley, an eleven-year-old youngster, delights to chat with the despondent failures in the park, in spite of her parent's disapproval. One day she takes an old man to her home and secretes him in the attic. He tells her that many years ago his little daughter was stolen from him. Joyce's mother goes to the garret, and discovers the ill-assorted pair. She recognizes the old man as being her father.

In the cast are Joyce Fair, Thomas Commerford, Fred Malatesta and Frances Raymond.

"Vernon Howe Bailey's Sketch Book of Rome." (Essanay. Split reel. Wed., April 26.)—Motion pictures of Bailey's sketches of the Vatican, Forum and other places, together with five hundred feet of western scenic.

"The Danger Line." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., April 29.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"A Double-Barrelled Courtship" (Kalem, Fri., April 21.)—Up to the standard of the regular Sis Hopkins comedies, in which as usual Miss Melville carries off the honors. Notably good work is done by the supporting cast, and with a good plot this release makes an exceptionally good offering.

"Counting Out the Count." (Kalem, Wed., April 26.)—An Ethel Teare comedy with a novel departure from the regular run of "fast and furious" laugh provokers. There are really two stories of loved and lover with the two sets of matchmaking parents that are finally brought to a harmonious whole by a capable cast alive to their respective roles.

"A Lucky Mistake." (Kalem, Fri., April 28.)—A Sis Hopkins comedy in which Henry Murdock in his character of Nervy Nat deserves special mention. Rose Melville's Sis Hopkins needs no exploiting and when in conjunction with her, there are laugh provoking situations brought out by her supporting cast and a more than ordinarily meritorious comedy is brought out.

"The Trail of Danger." (Kalem. Sat., April 29.)—This latest of the H. of H. Series has a chase after a speeding wrecking train and automobile with Helen Gibson on horseback doing the chasing. She swoops from the saddle while going at full speed and picks up a revolver she has dropped on the road, is lifted from the speeding horse by a crane reaching out from a speeding train and altogether furnishes thrill after thrill to an interesting phtoplay.

"Frocks and Frills." (Lubin. Mon., April 17.)—Davy Don masquerades as a rich widow in this better-than-usual comedy. There is virtually no slapstick, and Don shows he can really act if he is given the chance. George Egan, Florence Williams, and Patsy De Forest are in the cast, which was directed by Edwin McKim, also the author.

"One of the Pack." (Lubin. Two reels. Tues., April 18.)—The material used in this story is old, and the development offers nothing original, yet the picture is not uninteresting, thanks to rather skillful direction and a competent cast. It is merely a variation of the tainted blood theme, in which the villain wins the girl, by discrediting the hero. Finally, the villain is killed, of course. George Routh, Jay Morley, Louis Fitz Roy, Eleanor Belvins, George Berrell, Robert Gray, and A. H. Hayn were directed by Leon D. Kent.

"The Woman Who Did Not Care." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., April 24.)—The originality and vigor of the story carry the excess footage and improbability. Much of the story tells itself, and while a few subtitles would be advantageous, the situations are handled deftly by the director. The only criticism that suggests itself regarding the directing is anent the isolated anachronisms that crept in (such as a 1912 automobile in an episode supposed to take place 18 years ago). Eugenie Besserer, Edith Johnson, and Harry Mestayer do well with the leads.

Society is much wrought up by the scurrilous gossip printed in a yellow newspaper about their secret scandals. Since these stories are all true, there is no ground for a libel suit. When the engagement of Rose Carlson and Jack White is announced, the gossip column of the newspaper states that Rose is really an adopted orphan, the daughter of disreputable parents. Jack's parents insist that the engagement be broken off, until Mrs. Boyd, a prominent society woman, discovers that Rose is her daughter. Mrs. Boyd then confesses that she is the author of the gossip, and tells why she has exposed society foibles so relentlessly. Many years before she had married a man who deserted her, and insane from grief, she had gone to an asylum, while her daughter was adopted. When she regained her reason she determined to attack the society which had caused her downfall.

"Badgered." (Selig. Sat., April 29.)—An old story has here been given a new lease on life through a new twist. The director and players succeed in making it an interesting, though not remarkable release. The cast is composed of James Bradbury, Grace Darmond, Harry Mestayer, Al. Filson, and Edith Johnson.

Robertson, a young legislator, is in love with Vera, daughter of Colonel Jackson, a politician. When Robertson refuses to help pass a pork barrel measure, Jackson refuses to let him marry Vera, and seeks to discredit his character. He hires an adventuress to go to Robertson's room, to be found there later by some newspaper reporters. But when the reporters arrive they find Vera in Robertson's arms. They had just been married.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Girl from Chicago." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., April 18.)—An unusual story of the underworld serves to introduce charming Gladys Hulette as a young detective. Following a series of robberies, Banker Grayson announces a reward for the "man higher up." At a reception a baroness is wearing a magnificent necklace, and this is stolen by the "gang" through the agency of the girl and another crook disguised as servants.

The girl is arrested, but after conferring with other members of the gang, obtains her release on bail. At police headquarters she confronts Banker Grayson, and denounces him as the "man higher up." The chief then introduces the girl as a clever detective, and the banker goes away to jail. George Marlo and J. H. Gilmour are also in the cast.

"A Man's Sin." (Thanhouser. Three reels. Thur., April 20.)—In this subject a story of considerable human appeal is presented in a strong and convincing manner. A youth wrongs a girl, who loves him sincerely. The girl dies, leaving a little daughter, who is reared by an aunt, ignorant of her father's identity; she becomes a trained nurse, and many years later, her father, who had married and had another daughter, near her own age, is injured, and brought to the hospital, where the nurse attended him.

The aunt, who had long nursed a desire for revenge, sought to wreak it by attempting to involve the father with his own daughter. The plot is discovered by a physician at the hospital, who loves the girl, and she is saved. Later the guilty man makes reparation for his early sin. Grace De Carlton, Nellie S. Spaulding and Edwin Stanley head the cast.

"The Conquering Hero." (Cub. Fri., April 21.)—There is plenty of rough and tumble action in this comedy. Jerry steals Hank's girl, and after they knock each other down several times, and chase each other to the top of an office building, Jerry is thrown to the ground, fourteen stories below. It doesn't worry him much, however, and he is soon tormenting his rival again.

He is nailed up in a barrel and rolled down a hill, but, escaping, he dons a dress which he takes off a clothes dummy. Hank sees him and begins to flirt, which attracts a couple of policemen. Jerry then escapes, leaving Hank with the officers. George Ovey, George George, Louise Horner, Janet Sully and Arthur Mund compose the cast.

"Simple Simon's Schooling." (Falstaff. Sat., April 22.)—A comedy with a number of genuine laughs. Simple Simon, the grocer, is the butt of the jokes of the college students, but he bears them patiently because the attention they attract to him makes him wealthy. Then a pretty young penmanship teacher strikes town and forms a class. At a lawn party she announces that every member of the class has proposed to her, but she will marry the one who has learned to write the best hand. To the dismay of the college boys, Simon wins; his specimen of handwriting is a signature to a $10,000 check. In the cast are Claude Cooper, Billy Noel, Frank E. McNish and Gladys Leslie.

"The Counterfeit Earl." (American. Two reels. Mon., April 24.)—Enough complications to fill ten reels are crowded into this release. While some of them seem illogical, they keep the spectator on the qui vive. The acting is particularly good, George Periolat carrying the stellar honors, well supported by Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. Others who appear are Louise Lester, Marie Van Tassell, and Al Fordyce.

Lucy Bronson is in love with Ralph Cullom, but when Earl Twombley arrives in America, her mother hopes to get a title into the family. The Earl visits the Bronson's country estate, and during a party his dishonest valet disguises himself as his master and steals some jewels. This causes innumerable complications, and it appears that Ralph stole the jewelry, and that Mrs. Bronson is unfaithful to her husband. The capture of the bogus Earl clears up the mysteries and Lucy marries Ralph.

"The Island That Never Was." (Vogue. Tues., April 25.)—Rube Miller and his athletic cohorts amuse themselves in this picture by engaging in chases, fights, and other slapstick sports. While the audience may not derive as much fun from it as does the cast, there is considerable merriment scattered through the thousand feet. Also in the cast are Arthur Tavares, Alice Neice, George Gebhart, and Madge Kirby.

Rube, a shipwrecked sailor, is cast upon an island inhabited by fire-worshipers. He makes a hit with the natives by exploding a keg of powder and sending up some rockets, but they later chase him into the sea. He wakes up to find that it is all a dream, and that he has fallen off a barge into the water.

"Bugs and Bugles." (Beauty. Wed., April 26.)—The experienced funmakers of the cast do not have very pregnant material to work with, but they do their best to strew laughs through the footage. There are occasional situations that will draw a snicker from dyspeptics. John Sheehan, John Steppling, and Carol Halloway take the leads.

All the trouble is caused by a romantic bumpkin who reads aloud from a slushy novel in his hotel room. All the husbands in the vicinity think he is proposing to their wives, until the real state of affairs is made clear.

"A Broken Genius." (American. Three reels. Thurs., April 27.)—Several things contribute toward making this a very bookable picture. Many will be interested in the semi-nude artist's models shown, and while these may pique the interest, no stretch of prudish imagination could call the scenes displaying them vulgar. The well-directed story is strong and fairly original, and the leads are in capable hands. The photography is especially noteworthy.

The principals are Edward Coxen, George Field, and Lizette Thorne.

Karl Rittman is an artist who must use nude models in his work. Agnes, his wife, objects to this, and Hemingway, a friend, constantly keeps her stirred up over what he terms the "obscenity" of using models. Agnes finally runs away with Hemingway, but he is later killed, and she and Carl are enabled to start life anew.

"Unlucky Luke." (Mustang. Two reels. Fri., April 28.)—Not shown for review.

"Two Beds and No Sleep." (Beauty. Sun., April 30.)—Not shown for review.

"Bungling Bill, Doctor." (Vogue. Sun., April 30.)—Not shown for review.

PATHE EXCHANGE INC.

"Luke's Double." (Phunphilm.)—A bit of clever make-up, which looks almost like double exposure, is a diverting feature of this comedy. Luke becomes literary, and lies down to read "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." He falls asleep, and dreams he has a double, who constantly gets him into trouble. Theft, flirtation, and assault by this double are visited upon Luke, who takes the punishment for everything, until a squad of policemen lead him away to the station house. Then he wakes up to find it only a dream.

"The Iron Claw," No. 7. (Pathé. Two reels.)—This episode, entitled "The Hooded Helper" keeps up the extraordinary action of this serial in good shape, and the interest has shown no diminution as yet. Margery, who has again been returned to her father, gets the spotted warning, which is Legar's death sign. Consequently, Manly, her father's secretary, is constantly on guard, and at once he takes a dislike to a Count, who has made friends with her father, and has presented him with a piece of Japanese armor.

Margery, sitting near this armor, reading, is watched by Manly, who suddenly sees the arms of the armor lifted with a dagger, which is aimed at Margery. He draws his revolver and fires; the arms drop, and running to the armor, Manly finds it empty. He pulls it from its pedestal, and finds two holes in the wall, through which the arms carrying the dagger had been thrust. The would-be murderer, however, has escaped.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Thrown to the Lions." (Red Feather. Five reels. Mon., April 24.)—Reviewed at length in the issue of April 15.

"His Wooden Leg." (Nestor. Mon., April 24.)—By Floyd Burnes and produced by Horace Davey, this comedy shows the adventures of a couple to get rid of their inheritance, a wooden leg. It always comes back to them in some humorous way and at last they discover a small fortune enclosed in it. This has been handled excellently by the Nestor company and the result is a fine comedy with much that is clever, introduced by way of the action and the subtitles. Ray Gallagher and Billie Rhodes are the principals.

"The Other Half." (Gold Seal. Two reels. Tues., April 25.)—A young woman, unknown to herself the daughter of a gangster, falls in love with the son of a wealthy real estate man. He objects, knowing the girl's parentage whereat the gangster sets to work to discover a skeleton in the agent's closet. And it is there in the shape of blood money wrung from the poor. The marriage is made possible by this discovery.

G. Raymond Nye makes a commanding figure of the gangster and carries the story along nicely. W. B. Pearson prepared the scenario and save for the introductory, which is quite confusing, he has done well. Jacques Jaccard directed and a large supporting cast, including L. M. Wells, Hector Sarno, Roberta Wilson, Helen Wright and Paul Byron appears.

"Billy's War Brides." (Imp. Tues., April 25.)—William Garwood, once more as director-leading man for the eastern Universal studios appears in this comedy, which is somewhat mediocre. Billy dreams of being obliged to marry four ladies after the termination of the war. He picks his four from the German, French, Russian and Japanese. Their cooking gets his stomach into all sorts of trouble and four different doctors are called in with equally disastrous effect. By and by many, many babies arrive, and then Billy awakes.

"The Unexpected." (Rex. Tues., April 25.)—A comedy-drama with Francis Ford and Grace Cunard that has not been shown for review.

"Bill's Narrow Escape." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., April 26.)—Although this picture gets away with a poor start, the closing reel brings to light some excellent studio burlesque in which Billie Ritchie manages to stop all production at the L-Ko plant. There is less story than usual in these subjects and the supporting players, specially in the first reel, are not properly handled. Eva Nelson, Gene Rogers and Louise Orth are others.

"Lonesome House." (Laemmle. Wed., April 26.)—Showing the reunion of an aged pair separated in their younger days by a misunderstanding. A little girl played cleverly by Zoe Bech performs the reunion in captivating style. Thomas Jefferson and Julia Jackson are the old folks. This is a most pleasing little drama produced by George Cochrane from a scenario by Calder Johnstone.

"Miss Blossom." (Laemmle. Two reels. Thurs., April 27.)—In this picture Lynn Reynolds, director and author, has procured all the contrasts, the detail, the appropriate and significant scenes, the infinite little touches, the local color, and the acting, all of which go to make an excellent two reeler. It is sentimental and it is melodramatic in places, but these elements make the picture what it is—vastly unusual for a program release. The story we vouch for, it appeals throughout while Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul, Fred Church and Alfred Allen lend fine performances to the principal roles. We don't remember having seen a better two reeler from Universal.

"Such Is Life in China." (Powers. Thurs., April 27.)—A semi-topical-educational and cartoon picture, the former scenes being furnished by views of China while the latter come from the pen of Hy Mayer. The photography in the travelogue scenes is not very good, but the drawings by Mayer are worth while.

"Chicken Hearted Jim." (Rex. Thurs., April 27.)—Featuring the entire Ford family headed by Francis. This picture has not been shown for review.

"Why Mrs. Wentworth Lied." (Imp. Three reels. Fri., April 28.)—It is regrettable that Matt Moore and Jane Gail are obliged to waste their talents on a production such as this. While it holds one to a certain extent by reason of its acting and of its plot development, the climax falls quite flat and leaves much to be desired. There is besides quite a quantity of padding that is apt to cause restlessness on the part of the audience. The story hinges on the shooting of Wentworth and shows how his wife shielded the guilty man because he is related to the husband. Howard Crampton and Augustus Phillips have important parts.

"The Newlywed's Mixup." (Nestor. Fri., April 28.)—Concerning the jealous husband again, this comedy by Al Christie, produced by Eddie Lyons has the old time punch of Christie's comedies and entertains fully over its entire length. It has suspense and a quantity of humorous situations. Eddie Lyons, Betty Compson, Stella Adams and Harry Rattenberry are the leads.

"The Torrent of Vengeance." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., April 29.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"The Jitney Driven Romance." (Joker. Sat., April 29.)—An excellent comedy by William Farmer, produced by Roy Clements with William Franey, Gale Henry and Milburn Moranti in the principal parts. It tells of the jitney bus driver who is in love with the railroad president's daughter and the complications that arise from this romance are both humorous and original.

"A Family Affair." (Powers. Sat., April 29.) This is an old comedy produced by Clarence Badger from one of his own scenarios. It concerns the rivalry of two Italian laborers and many complications result. From the looks of the synopsis these might be very humorous, but the picture has not been shown for review recently. Bob Vernon, Carmen Phillips, Eddie Boland and Fred Adrath are the principals.

"Through Flames to Love." (Imp. Two reels. Sun., April 30.)—Old conventional, melodramatic story. The city man, the country girl, and her heroic lover, who rescue her from Mr. City Man. Perhaps there are some who haven't seen such a theme, and perhaps they'll like it, but to others it will appear quite dry. William Welsh, Harry Benham and Edna Hunter are the leads. Their support is poor and the camera man's work is hardly commendable.

"Their Anniversary." (Rex. Sun., April 30.)—A most enjoyable comedy drama in which both husband and wife remember the wedding anniversary, but neither wishes to broach the subject until the other does. Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips appear in this. It was written by Sam Greiner and has some excellent comedy in it.

Camera Men

Wanted—magazine stories in motion pictures—about 200 feet each, including titles. Novel ideas of national interest, inventions clearly explained by close-ups, unusual photographic effects, and trick pictures—except animated cartoons.

Anything novel will receive prompt attention and will be returned express prepaid, without delay, if found unsuitable. Negatives will be received with or without test print. Full list of suggested titles should be included.

The free lance now has a market with Paramount Pictographs—"The Magazine on the Screen" (not a news weekly). Send in your name for our list; we will keep you advised as to our wants. Address Pictograph Division.

"The Film Hunters"

Taken in the Columbia National Forest and the Yakima Indian Reservation, State of Washington.

The party, consisting of three men, a dog and four pack horses, left "civilization" the last week in May and struck into the foothills of the Cascades. After five days on the trail they came to the "Goat Rock" Country, which lies about 35 miles north of Mt. Adams.

Their trail was so blocked with huge snow drifts, they were unable to proceed. They camped at Fish Lake for six days, but when the feed for the horses gave out, they were forced to turn back.

EXHIBITOR

RENTER

MANUFACTURER

The British Edition of Motion Picture News will carry the complete story and cast of all films on the Impartial Review Chart.

This will give the Exhibitor a comprehensive knowledge of the theme of all subjects, the actions taking place, and the casts appearing in the productions—practically a "Mental Photographic Review."

The Renter will be able to apprise the exhibitor that he has bought a copy of these films—remembering—that the exhibitor is already familiar with these subjects from reading the British Edition. These productions have become more than a mere name—in fact, these are the films the exhibitor WILL BOOK.

The Manufacturer must keep his productions prominently before the exhibitor and renter. By so doing he is rendering the British buyer an invaluable service. They require good films and his most logical and forcible medium is

The Best Built Projector In America

Can you afford to purchase a projector that is not made of the best material and is only a short-life machine?

The MOTIOGRAPH is built to project rock-steady pictures at small cost of up-keep.

FRAME—High grade gray iron castings—not a composition of lead and zinc.

BEARINGS—4 high grade phosphor bronze bearings on Cam Shafts, hardened and ground.

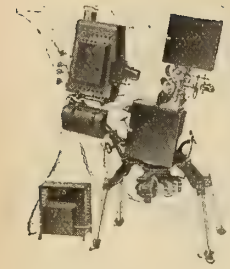
SLIDING DISC CONNECTION—made of high grade steel, hardened and ground, is taking the place of the ball arbor used in former models and insures a steady picture at a high rate of speed.

OTHER PARTS OF THE MECHANISM are made of the same high grade material and receive the same treatment.

GEARS—all steel, known as the Never-wear-out Gears.

LAMPHOUSE—made of high grade material, asbestos lined.

ARC LAMP—all necessary adjustments.



THE LATE MODEL MOTIOGRAPH—a projector that is made right and priced right for the conservative buyer.

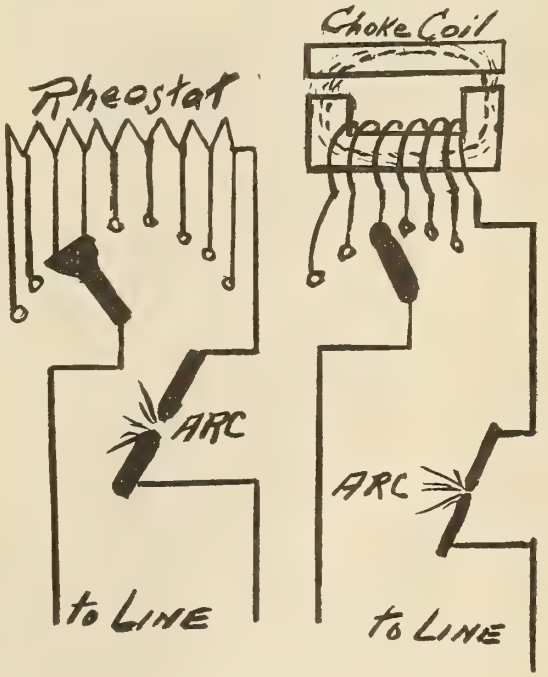
Motion Picture Projection Simplified

By J. H. Hallberg

83—Is it possible to take an ordinary rheostat adjustment switch and use it for connection to the various turns of a choke-coil as is done with a rheostat on D. C.?

Ans.—No The ordinary rheostat adjusting switch generally has the contacts or buttons so close together that the adjustment lever will cover two buttons at the same time without a break in the circuit, thus actually short circuiting that porion of the rheostat which is between two of the buttons covered by the switch contact.



If you should do this with a choke-coil, I believe you have been sufficiently informed to know that it must not be done. It is not permissible to short circuit any portion of a transformer or regular choke-coil winding, because if you do, those turns which are short circuited, will form a circuit of very low resistance, which under the excitation of the alternately magnetized iron core will have created within them a current of very high density or amperage which will, of course, overheat that portion of the coil and burn out its insulation, if the fuses do not blow. In view of this fact, if an adjustable switch has to be put on a choke-coil to cut in or to cut out turns, it is necessary to separate the contact buttons on the adjusting switch so that the lever contact will break the circuit upon leaving one button before connecting with the next one, so that there will never be a short circuit on any portion of the turns or windings of the choke-coil.

84—If the rheostat as well as the choke-coil reduces the line voltage to that required by the arc, why can you not use the regular rheostat switch? It seems that it would be permissible to short circuit a few turns of the choke-coil.

Ans.—No! It is not permissible to short circuit any portion of a choke-coil under any consideration unless the choke-coil is very small and wound in sections, separated from each other. If few turns are to be short circuited, it can be provided for by the engineer when he is making up the design for such special choke-coil.

The rheostat is a potential or voltage absorber. In other words, it uses up the voltage and dissipates it in the form of heat.

The choke-coil, on the other hand, is a potential or voltage producer due to the fact that its iron core is influenced by the A. C. flowing through the windings surrounding the core. The choke-coil effects its voltage reduction by creating within itself a potential or voltage in opposition to the incoming voltage from the line. From this you will understand that the choke-coil does not absorb voltage from the line, but the current going through the coil magnetizes in alternate directions the iron core within the coil and it is this magnetism which creates at the instant the current is reversed a potential and current within the coil in opposition to the incoming line voltage and that is the reason for the saving possible with the choke-coil over the rheostat. It is also on this account that you must not short circuit any portion of the windings of a choke-coil, as this will surely blow fuses or burn out the insulation, and will also interfere with the operation of the coil.

85—Illustrate the adjustable arrangement for a rheostat as compared with a choke-coil.

Ans.—Fig. 41 illustrates in diagram form the regular rheostat adjusting switch.

former where it is necessary in order to effect a particular adjustment to increase or decrease the number of turns in series with the circuit. Your particular attention is called to the contact lever which breaks the circuit before it makes new contact. It will, of course, be satisfactory to use the choke-coil switch for a rheostat as well in case of necessity, but it will not give as good satisfaction when used with a rheostat as the regular adjusting switch, which bridges two contacts at the time, because there will be a dip in the illumination on the screen or an intermission in the operation of the device for a fraction of a second when switching from one button to the other, if the turning of the handle is not done very rapidly.

Camera Makes and Their Differences for Exhibitors

Although Motion Picture Cameras of English and French Manufacturers Have Always Been in High Favor with American Film Producers and Find Ready Sale, the Industry in This Country Has Instruments Unsurpassed by None for Accuracy, Workmanship and Quality of Material Used in Their Construction

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article is the first of a series to appear, describing in detail the various makes of motion picture cameras on the market.

It is our intention to publish articles from time to time covering these cameras in order that our subscribers who are interested in photography may have an authoritative place to which they can refer in regard to the various makes of instruments.

ALTHOUGH motion picture cameras of English and French manufacture have always been in high favor with the American film producers, and find a ready sale, the industry in this country has, in the Bell and Howell camera, an instrument surpassed by none for accuracy of workmanship, quality of the materials used and mechanical conception.

By the aid of this article and three views of the apparatus we will endeavor to make clear the distinctive features and operation of the Bell and Howell camera.

In the first instance the camera is an all metal one, the case, frame and magazines being of aluminum.

The working parts are of the best steel and other suitable metals and the camera has ball bearings throughout which do not require oiling, and are self compensating for wear.

The magazines are cast in pairs so that the supply and take-up compartments are all together when wanted, and the magazine covers being round, to conform with the shape of the magazine itself, are fastened in place by screwing them on, similar to the back of a modern watch case.

As will be noted by reference to Fig. 1, there is provision for a number of lenses on the Bell and Howell camera front, the lenses being mounted on a revolving turret. The value of this lens mount is twofold. In addition to being able to bring lenses of different foci into instant use, the focussing operation, a distinctive feature of this camera, is greatly facilitated by the use of the turret proceeding as follows:

On the operating side of the machine is the focussing aperture, Fig. 2, No. 1, which is entirely separate from the exposure or picture taking aperture Fig. 2, No. 2.

Camera Mounted on Groove on Tripod Top

Back of the focussing aperture is a compartment, Fig. 1, No. 5, in which is mounted a ground glass, back of which is a strong magnifier. By referring to Fig. 1, No. 8, it will also be noticed

Directory of New Theatres

This department is designed to be a weekly guide to all sales, leases, construction and remodeling of photoplay theatres. If you are building, selling, leasing or renovating, kindly communicate it at once for publication.

ARIZONA

THE combination soft drink-dance hall-motion picture theatre on the roof of a building at Oatman, the new gold mine town, has proven a failure and has been closed. Two theatres continue at this mushroom village. One is owned by F. J. Toole and known as the Oatman. Here twenty-five cents admission is charged. The theatre is of the ground floor variety, literally and figuratively, and the seats consist of benches.

John Barncord, owner and manager of the Lamara Theatre at Phoenix, is building an eight hundred seat house at Flagstaff, which he expects to open not later than June 15. The approximate cost of this building is sixteen thousand and the equipment four thousand.

ARKANSAS

L. W. Brophy announces that he will build a picture house at Fort Smith in the future.

CALIFORNIA

Palm Beach, a swimming and amusement place at Alameda, a suburb of San Francisco, has been opened for the season. A moving picture theatre is one of the attractions and on the opening day entertainment was offered free.

The Popular Amusement Company, which controls the Portola Theatre, San Francisco, has secured a renewal of the lease on the theatre property for a term of years. It has not been announced what disposition will be made of this house when the big theatre at Fourth and Market streets is completed.

The Electric Theatre on Union street, San Francisco, has been destroyed by fire with a loss estimated at about $10,000. It is believed that the fire was caused by crossed electric wires.

The Lyric Photo Play Company of Stockton has been granted a permit to sell stock, the proceeds to be used in the equipment of a theatre about to be built and which the company proposes to lease.

The Excelsior Theatre on the Onondaga Avenue district, San Francisco, has been opened by Mr. Doll, who formerly conducted the Poppy Theatre.

The Park Theatre at Alameda has been purchased by E. W. Scott, formerly of Indiana.

The name of the M. & F. Theatre at San Francisco has been changed to that of the Palmer.

New equipment has been added to the operating room of the Liberty Theatre, San Jose, two Motiograph machines having been installed.

John Tully, formerly owner of the Arlington Theatre, Los Angeles, which was sold to T. and D. circuit, has purchased the house formerly known as the Bear Theatre, Third and Figueroa streets, which he has renamed the Rose. Manager Tully has inaugurated a feature program, supplemented by a serial.

E. D. Phillips has purchased Photoplay Theatre Number One at 729 West Washington street, Los Angeles, of C. E. Brooks.

The Alhambra, Miller's Hill Street Theatre in Los Angeles, now has eight rows of loge seats at the rear, and the prices have been increased from ten and twenty cents, to ten, twenty and thirty cents. The Alhambra up until it came under the management of Mr. Miller, had never been successful. It has been open about two years, and in charge of Mr. Miller for the past four months.

The Empress Theatre, Los Angeles, formerly the home of S. and C. vaudeville, has been opened under the management of J. A. Quinn as a motion picture theatre. The house has a balcony which, with the main floor, gives a seating capacity of twelve hundred.

CANADA

The Unique Theatre of St. John, N. B., which was dark for over a week, reopened on Monday, April 10. There was a change in policy, which included a longer program and the use of features. It is altogether likely that Unique will increase the price from five cents to fifteen.

The Mount Royal Theatre of Montreal, P. Q., has been redecorated and presents a very pleasing appearance. Business is even better than ever with this favorite North End House.

The Lux Theatre of Montreal, P. Q., has a new manager, and one who certainly has made a rapid rise in the business. Just seven months ago, Harry Goldenhar was an operator in the very theatre of which he is now manager, but a sequence of events gave him a chance to prove his ability.

CONNECTICUT

With the grand opening on April 6 of the Liberty moving picture house situated just west of Colorado avenue on State street, Bridgeport, residents of that section may consider themselves fortunate in securing such an addition to their amusement field. The theatre, which was purchased by H. A. Cohen, formerly with S. Z. Poli, from the original owners, has undergone a marvelous change. The entire building has been remodeled, renovated and decorated in an artistic manner.

FLORIDA

The Arcade Theatre at Lemon City has been remodeled and repainted.

P. W. Hutchinson has leased the Republic Theatre from T. V. Cashen, at Jacksonville, and will run pictures exclusively.

GEORGIA

Frank Miller announces that he will spend $7,000 in remodeling the Modjeska Theatre at Augusta, and will add 400 new seats.

J. L. Saul is erecting a moving picture theatre at Winder, to be managed by L. Love.

Mrs. E. C. Hightower and son have taken charge of the new Crystal Theatre at Dublin. Feature pictures are shown.

B. Lee Smith has taken over the management of the Strand Theatre at Atlanta. He was formerly manager of the Georgian at Atlanta.

W. T. Murray will soon open a 1,000-chair moving picture theatre in Atlanta. The house will cost about $50,000 and will open June 1.

INDIANA

Extensive improvements are being made in the Gennett, the old legitimate theatre in Richmond, which is to be devoted to photoplays exclusively, and hereafter will be known as the Washington. It is being entirely modernized and transformed. The doors will be reopened in about three months. Charles Kinsel will have charge.

L. D. Wilson, of Muncie, has bought the Scenic theatre, at Franklin, from Fred Ballard, and has taken charge of it. Mr. Ballard bought the Scenic last year from his father.

Negotiations are now pending between the owners of the Jefferson theatre at Jeffersonville, and the owners of the building now occupied by Schwaninger's drug store, for the entire lower floor to be remodeled and used for a moving picture theatre. The building is located at Spring and Chestnut streets, and four doors from the present site of the Jefferson theatre.

The Demman moving picture show at Vevay has opened.

S. O. McCarthy has bought the Palace theatre at Carthage from Mr. Hiatt.

The state fire marshal's office has ordered Theodore Charles, manager of the Star theatre at Vincennes, to make certain improvements following a visit of a deputy of fire marshal's office. Mr. Charles will make the improvements.

The Grand theatre at Kokomo has been bought by Mrs. Belle Sweeney and her son, Harry Sweeney, from W. C. Allen and Mrs. B. R. Russell.

The Holmes brothers will open a new $12,000 motion picture theatre in West Terre Haute on July 1. It will accommodate five hundred persons and among the modern equipment will be a pipe organ. The Gytney theatre, now operated by the Holmes brothers, will be closed at the time of the opening of the new house. This place will be named after its owners.

IOWA

Dave Beatty, proprietor of the Fairfield theatre, Fairfield, reports such a boom in business since he began features that he has had to enlarge his place. Work is now under way.

Dr. J. W. Pence, of Columbus Junction, has reopened the Lyric, renovating and redecorating it.

Bausman and Boyd are making improvements to their house, the Empress, at LeMars.

Hammitt Brothers, for years exhibitors in South Dakota, have bought the Isis, one of the large houses in Sioux City, and are now busy making repairs and remodeling. They have named it the U. S. A.

KANSAS

The Blue Bird is the name of a new theatre to be opened in Girard about May 1. Thomas Miller, of that place, has purchased a building there and is doing some extensive remodeling. The name is unique in every respect, and there is little doubt but what there are no others like it in this section. Incidentally, Mr. Miller has signed up for every picture produced by Blue Bird.

KENTUCKY

Repairs on the Ben Ali theatre, Lexington, which was badly damaged by fire several months ago, have been completed. The house has reopened with a picture program.

The Midway Amusement Company has been organized at Midway by C. W. Parish, R. Godson, John Wise, W. M. Campbell and W. A. Anderson. The company will begin soon the erection of a theatre building on Railroad street. It will be an opera house and motion picture theatre combined.

R. L. Brown and his son, Otto Brown, have purchased a site at Middlesboro, on which they are planning to erect a motion picture house.

LOUISIANA

Levy and Sudduth will soon open a new $15,000 motion picture theatre at Natchitoches.

W. H. Franklin is opening a new $10,000 moving picture house at Leesville.

J. J. de Praslin will soon open new picture houses at Lake Charles and Crowley.

Peter Fabacher has taken over the Dixie theatre at New Orleans. Mr. Fabacher also operates the Wonderland theatre.

MARYLAND

The Crown theatre, formerly owned by J. Laskey and situated at 756 Columbia avenue, Baltimore, has been purchased by Charles F. Habighurst. The consideration is withheld. The Crown has a seating capacity of about 300 and is one of the most popular picture theatres in southwest Baltimore. The place was recently renovated and improved just before the purchase, and it is practically a new house. Mr. Habighurst now has two theatres under his management. He is one of the owners and the active manager of the Liberty theatre, 5 North Liberty street. The policy pursued at the Liberty will be installed at the Crown.

MASSACHUSETTS

William Murphy, manager of Orpheum at Brockton, announces that foundations have been started for Felix Alland's new theatre and office building there.

The Highland Avenue theatre, Somerville, opened April 3.

It is under the management of Bart E. Grady, and located corner of Highland avenue and Central street in the Knights of Columbus building.

MICHIGAN

Fire did considerable damage to the Auditorium theatre, Brown City, on April 3.

The Miles-Detroit theatre at its annual meeting April 12 elected E. W. Voight, president; S. X. Goldberg, vice-president, and Dr. Paul C. Dulits, secretary and treasurer. It was decided to continue with the policy of vaudeville and motion pictures.

Nathaniel Robbins, of Grand Haven, is having plans prepared for a moving picture theatre.

A. W. Marcussen, formerly of Big Rapids, has purchased the Orpheum theatre at Ionia, and has already taken possession. He has been in the theatre business for ten years. The former owner, Fred Lauster Sr., died recently.

The Arcade theatre, Charlotte, has undergone a complete remodeling. The new front is of white stucco with highly ornate designs. The woodwork is finished in imitation mahogany. The capacity of the theatre has been increased by one-third. The operators' room is built of hollow tile and is absolutely fireproof. A new ventilating system has also been installed.

MISSISSIPPI

S. B. Ford has purchased the interest of the Pictureland theatre at Crystal Springs, and is now managing the house.

Sam Rosso has opened a new picture house at Woodville.

The Air Dome, a new motion picture show, owned and operated by local people, opened at Hazlehurst on April 3.

MISSOURI

The Star theatre at Trenton was recently closed and the entire equipment shipped to a point in Oklahoma.

Pat Malone, a newcomer to the moving picture business has taken over a building in Jamesport, and is having it remodeled and equipped for a moving picture house. It is expected to be opened about April 23.

The Columbia Novelty Manufacturing Company have purchased a lot 25x150 feet at 2109 North Twelfth street, St. Louis, on which to erect an airdome to be operated in connection with the Webster theatre, which adjoins the lot. The Webster, which is under the management of Graham and Sons, is a modern neighborhood house, and was built last fall at a cost of $25,000.

NEBRASKA

The paint brush and the remodeling hammer are busy in the motion picture theatres of the middle West. Exhibitors and exchange men are looking forward to one of the best seasons yet. While the increase in the number of new houses is not so great, those now firmly established are to be a real credit to a live industry.

Manager Joe Kohlberg of the Farnam, 1417 Farnam street, Omaha, has decorators and remodelers at work on his house. He recently started showing features exclusively and is having his theatre made over into a "feature house."

Manager Thomas of the Strand theatre, Omaha, announced plans are completed for improvements that will cost several thousand dollars. The Strand is the largest exclusive motion picture house in Omaha.

The Bijou at Wahoo, Crawford and Biermacher owners, is being thoroughly cleaned, repainted and redecorated.

NEW JERSEY

Announcement has been made by Joseph E. Stricker, one of the incorporators of the Hywil Company, which has taken title to the German Reformed Church property, New Brunswick, that the building is to be entirely remodeled and transformed into a structure of attractive appearance and to contain three stores and a moving picture theatre. Architect William H. Boylan has prepared the plans for the work and the general contract has been awarded to George B. Rule. The improvements, including heating, electrical works, etc., will represent an outlay of approximately $15,000.

NEW YORK

Manager Buck announces the opening of the Arbor theatre, on North Swan street, near Second street, Albany. The theatre has a big seating capacity and is built along modern lines, with safety, convenience and sanitary appliances important features.

Negotiations have been completed whereby Carthage will be assured of a modern moving picture theatre. E. W. Colligan, owner and proprietor of the Hippodrome theatre in State street, has just closed a deal in which he obtains the lease for

BILL INTRODUCED TO LICENSE OPERATORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

CONGRESSMAN Ben Johnson of Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives, has introduced, at the request of the district commissioners, a bill (H. R. 14479) into the House of Representatives "To license operators of cinematographs, moving picture machines and similar apparatus, and for other purposes."

The text of the bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful for any person to operate any cinematograph, maving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus in the District of Columbia without having first obtained a license to operate such apparatus as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 2. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of examiners, consisting of one employe of the electrical department, one employe of the office of the inspector of buildings, and one employe of the fire-prevention force of the fire department, to serve during the pleasure of the said commissioners. It shall be the duty of the said board to examine all applicants for license to operate cinematographs, moving-picture machines, or similar apparatus, and to license each applicant who is found by the said board to be competent to operate such apparatus: Provided, That no license referred to herein shall be issued except after the payment of the license fee hereinafter provided for.

"In the conduct of examinations and the issuance of licenses the board of examiners shall be governed by such rules and regulations as may from time to time be promulgated by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"Sec. 3. Thate each person receiving a license to operate cinematographs, moving-picture machines, or other similar apparatus in the District of Columbia shall pay a license fee of five dollars, and the said fee shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia and by him deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

"Sec. 4. That the examination provided for herein shall be a practical examination, and for this purpose the board of examiners is hereby authorized to purchase cinematographs, moving-picture machines, or other similar apparatus, stationery, printing, and office supplies, at a cost not to exceed $300 in any one fiscal year, and the appropriation for the contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the District of Columbia is hereby made available for such purchases, which shall be made through the purchasing officer of the District of Columbia upon the requisition of the said board.

"Sec. 5. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be prosecuted upon information filed by the corporation counsel or one of his assistants in the name of the District of Columbia in the police court of the District of Columbia, and upon conviction thereof be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, and, in addition to such fine, the license of such convicted person shall be subject to revocation by the board of examiners hereinbefore provided for after due notice and hearing accorded to the licensee.

"Sec. 6. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to promulgate from time to time such regulations as they may deem necessary for the operation of cinematographs, moving-picture machines, and similar apparatus not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 7. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

It is said that this measure has the approval of the motion picture operators. It has been referred to the House Committee on the District of Columbia, but in view of the condition of the legislative calendars there is little possibility of its coming to a vote in the House at this session of Congress.

This bill is very similar to the one which was introduced into the Rhode Island legislature this year.

TENNESSEE

The name of the Picto theatre at Chattanooga has been changed to the Alhambra and the seating capacity increased to seven hundred.

The Alcazar theatre at Chattanooga is being remodeled and enlarged.

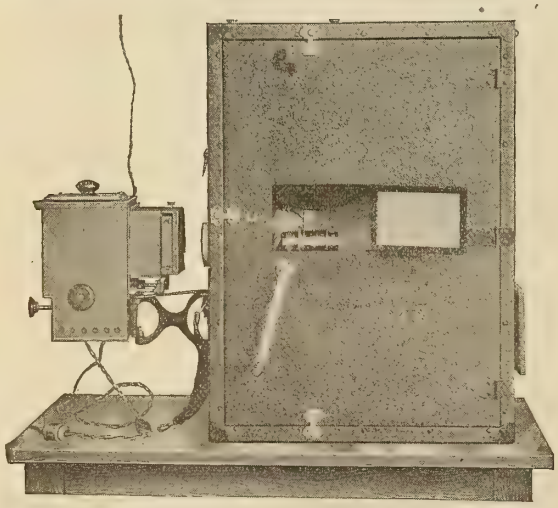
Light, Compact Projection Machines for Schools



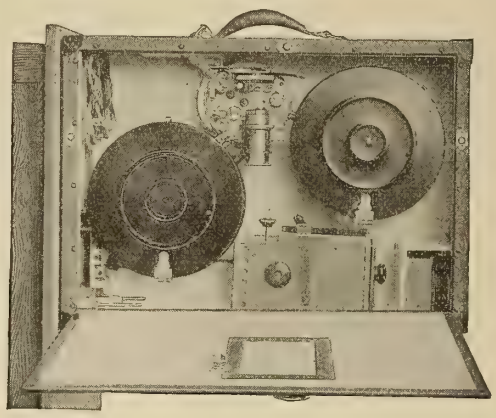
Aim of Manufacturers Is to Put on Market Mechanism Which Will be of Service for Showing Standard Films in Churches, Lectures and for Commercial Purposes—It Must Have All the Good Points of the Larger Machines, Yet Be Sold at a Comparatively Low Cost

IT has been the aim of many manufacturers of motion picture machines to produce a compact, light and convenient machine for projecting standard films for schools, churches and commercial purposes, as well as for home use.

The development of a small projector is no easy task because a small machine must be made and designed as perfectly as a large one in order that the results produced may be up to standard. It must also be made at a comparatively low cost, as well as being portable and yet contain the features which make it as nearly as possible fireproof and ready for service.

The Motion Picture-Scope Company of 565 West Washington street, Chicago, has placed on the market a portable machine called the Portoscope, which is in every sense as the name signifies a portable motion picture projector.

In designing the machine the manufacturers have borne in mind the needs of travelling salesmen, demonstrators, lecturers and all those who must have a light portable mechanism.



The most unique part of the machine is the fact that there is no putting together, unpacking or annoying delay. The entire mechanism is in a single case, the only exterior part being the lamp house, which is slipped in place at a second's notice and attached to an ordinary electric lighting circuit.

Special Light Rays Device

A special device has been arranged through which the light rays have passed, thus enabling the mechanism to be stopped at any point and holding the film stationary on the screen. The illumination for the regular machine emanates from an incondescent light, an automatic fire shutter cutting off the light from the film when operation ceases and the heat eliminator is not in alignment. The reels are enclosed within steel magazines securely latched. The whole inside of the machine case is lined with asbestos.

Another point of safety is the fact that the mechanism cannot be started until the outside door is closed and fastened.

A special stereopticon attachment is also contained within the machine, the lamphouse being so arranged that it can automatically be switched from the film to an accurate alignment with the slides which are used on the same principle as in a large projector.

All the gears are cut from hard brass and the shafts are made of drill tool steel. The intermittent is the standard Geneva star and cam movement, while standard lenses are supplied with every outfit. There are three models of the Portoscope on the market.

Model No. 1 is designed in one unit for standard 1,000-foot reels, the lamphouse equipment being carried packed inside the case. Dimensions: Height, 21 inches; length, 29 inches; width, 7½ inches; weight, 45 pounds.

Model No. 2 is specially designed for salesmen with 500-foot reels of film and fibre carrying case for the lamphouse. With this model can also be obtained the carbon lamp which uses ¼ or 5/16 inch carbons. The rheostat is built inside the lamphouse and is adjustable for 5 or 10 amperes. This is an extra equipment. Dimensions: Height, 16½ inches; length, 24 inches; width, 6¾ inches; weight, 21 pounds.

Model No. 3 uses 1,100-foot reels, the lamphouse being carried separately. With this can be purchased a standard size lamp for standard size carbons (⅝ of an inch). This is extra equipment. Dimensions: Height, 19 inches; length, 29 inches; width, 7½ inches; weight, 35 pounds.

From this it can be seen that the Portoscope is as compact a machine as has yet been placed on the market. It is meeting with popular demand and filling a definite need in very satisfactory fashion.

ONE SIDE OF PICTURE GETS OUT OF FOCUS

E. B. W., Mattoon, Ill.—I am throwing a picture 70 feet, 9 feet 1 inch by 12 feet 4 inches with a 5¼-inch lens and using one condensing lens 5½, the others 6½. I have a good clean field now; one side of my picture is out of focus and when I get that side in focus the other side and center are out of focus.

ANS.—I advise you to make sure of the following points in order to secure perfect focus all over your screen:

First.—Make sure your screen is perfectly flat. That is, if it is of the flexible type, see that it is stretched tight and that the frame upon which it is stretched is not buckled or bent. If your screen is a wall, make sure that it is flat and has no bulges or hollows.

SPEER CARBONS

F. F. Bell of Palestine, Texas, states: Speer Carbons make the picture stand out!

Dear Sir:

We bought two-hundred (200) Speer Carbons which they said were shipped out from the new factory, erected solely for the manufacture of projection carbons. Well, the minute I struck an arc (using A. C.) I felt there was something different. The light seemed brighter and of a greenish hue. It certainly makes the picture stand out.

Second.—Make sure that your moving picture machine stands as near to the center as possible so that the central ray of projection will hit the center of the screen, because if your machine stands to one side or the other to any great extent, your picture is likely to be out of focus on one side or the other, when another part of the picture is in focus.

Third.—Make sure that your aperture plate rests perfectly on the machine because sometimes through accident or carelessness the aperture plate does not go all the way in and one side may sit a little further away from the lens than the other. This is a very important point because in many instances a small burr or even a piece of film might put the aperture plate out just far enough to throw your picture out of focus on one side.

Fourth.—Not knowing the make of your machine I cannot say whether or not there is any possibility of the front plate on the mechanism having shifted to one side or the other, which would throw your lens out of alignment, but it is well for you to remember to make sure that the front plate into which the lens jacket screws, is tightly and properly into place and perfectly flat and square.

Fifth.—Make sure the jacket into which the lens tube fits, screws tightly and without crossed thread into the front plate because if it does not screw in as it should, there is a possibility of the lens sticking to one side or the other out of alignment.

Sixth.—Now comes a very important part of the whole proposition and that is your lens tube. It is not generally remembered by the operators that the individual glasses of the lens tube or lens unit must be so assembled that the greater curvature or convex part of the lens always faces towards the screen and also that the lens cell next to the aperture plate is the one in which there is mounted two separate lens glasses and the other end of the tube in which there is mounted what appears to be a single glass, is always towards the screen.

In many instances I have found the entire lens tube put into the jacket so that the greater curvature side of the glasses are facing the aperture plate instead of the screen and that will cause a blurred picture just as you describe and it is impossible to secure proper focus all over the picture. It is then necessary to examnie the glasses and to make sure that everything is in place.

Seventh.—The impression of a dirty or greasy finger will often diffuse the picture or blurr it, making it impossible to secure a sharp and snappy picture.

Eighth.—If your top roller on the film gate is too narrow so that it will pinch the film or if it is of split kind with a spring pushing it together under too strong tension then your film may buckle under certain conditions in front of the aperture which would throw your picture out of focus.

IS IT ADVISABLE TO SCRATCH CELLULOID SIDE IN PATCHING FILM?

E. K. G., New York City.—I have just had an inquiry as to whether in patching film, it is right or wrong to scratch the celluloid side.

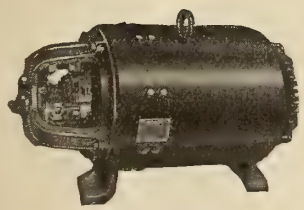
We know that the emulsion must be entirely scratched off about one-eighth of an inch or so.

The question is, whether the cement eats into the celluloid sufficiently without scratching, to cause tight joint to be made.

Ans.—With new clean film it should not be necessary in making a splice to scrape the side without emulsion. It may, however, be remembered and taken into consideration that most film, especially after it has been used once or twice has more or less oil and dirt on it. Therefore, it is recommended that the uncoated side of the film should be cleaned and even scraped so as to make sure of a clean and perfect surface before the splice is made.

We can imagine that the scraping of the uncoated surface will make the film thinner, at the same time cleaning it, giving us two points of advantage.



1.—To insure that the surface is clean which should make a surer splice. 2.—A slight reduction in the thickness of the film stock right at the splice does no harm; in fact, it makes the splice go over the sprockets easier.

that the camera is mounted in a groove on the tripod top, being movable sideways within definite limits.

In focussing the Bell and Howell instrument the camera is moved over on the tripod top to a position farthest from the operating side. The lens to be used is then rotated to a position before the focussing aperture. A correct focus having been obtained on the focussing ground glass, which lies in exactly the same plane as the film in the exposure aperture, the lens is then returned to the photographing position and the camera slid back across the tripod top to the operator's side of same. The right focus with absolutely correct "lines" to the picture has thus been quickly secured with no waste of film. Figures 1 and 2 show the camera in correct position on the tripod for taking a view.

Still another noteworthy feature of the Bell and Howell camera is its dissolving shutter. In addition to the regular exposing shutter, an auxiliary shutter is provided by means of which perfect dissolves and "fades" may be executed. In Fig. 1 No. 3 is the shutter index dial which indicates the degree of shutter opening, and may be adjusted from outside the camera by the shutter adjusting knob, Fig. 1, No. 2.

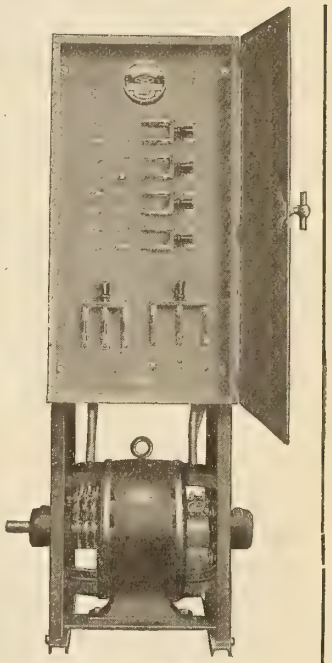
The maximum shutter opening is 120 degrees and ranges from that to entirely closed.

The following is the correct procedure for a complete dissolve of one scene into another. The shutter being set to 120 degrees opening, by the use of the shutter adjusting knob, Fig. 1, No. 2, and the camera being in operation, the dissolver button, Fig. 1, No. 1, is turned to the position marked "out." This meshes certain gears and the shutter gradually closes.



It takes eight crank revolutions to close the shutter, when the camera will automatically stop running. In order to complete the dissolve the take-up belt is now shifted from the rear pulley, Fig. 1, No. 6, to the front pulley, No. 7. The mechanism is now unlocked or released by pressing the push button, Fig. 2, No. 8, which releases the brake, Fig. 2, No. 9.

Having noted the exact position of the crank it is now turned backwards through eight revolutions, and the take-up belt again returned to the rear pulley.

Perfectly Even Dissolve Accomplished

The dissolver button, Fig. 1, No. 1, is now turned to the position marked "In." The camera is again operated and when the shutter index dial registers 120 degrees the film will have been re-exposed and a perfectly even dissolve accomplished.

The "MARTIN" ROTARY CONVERTER

FOR REAL "SUN-LIT" PICTURES

AND PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING
The machine they are all talking about

The voltage of the Martin poly-phase converter is maintained constant so that the starting of the second arc positively does not disturb the light given by the first arc. This makes the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district.
Our emergency panel provides A. C. for the lamps in case the rotary should be out of service and thereby eliminates the cost of compense-arcs for emergency purposes.
The placing of the converter in base of panel board makes it a self-contained outfit and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

We hold it up for your inspection

For a simple fade-out at the end of a scene the procedure will be as the foregoing up to the point where the camera stops. The release button, Fig. 2, No. 8, is then depressed, releasing the mechanism and the shutter is set back to 120 degrees, as recorded on the shutter index dial, by means of the shutter adjusting knob, Fig. 1, No. 2, when the camera will be ready for subsequent use. As there are some points of importance to be observed in threading this camera the proper procedure follows.

Firstly, to correctly load the film magazine the film should be rewound so that the emulsion side is out and placed in the front compartment, as shown in Fig. 3. The film is then led through the valve in the front compartment, through the valve in the rear compartment, and attached to the take-up spool. A loop of sufcient length to clear the lower side of the feed and take-up sprocket is drawn down, and the magazine is fixed in position upon the camera by means of the locking screw, Fig. 3, No. 10.

Turning the camera crank causes the aperture register leaf, Fig. 3, No. 7, to be rocked back from the exposure aperture. Turn back the upper and lower sprocket latches, Fig. 3, Nos. 3 and 5, thus carrying the sprocket rollers, Fig. 3, Nos. 2, 4 and 6, away from the sprocket, Fig. 3, No. 1. The film should now be made to engage with the teeth on the lower side of the sprocket, Fig. 3, No. 1, and the lower latch and rollers closed upon it.

Perforations Must Not Engage Sprocket Teeth at Top

Leaving the upper sprocket guard rollers open and being careful that the film perforations do not engage the sprocket teeth at the top, draw enough film forward to reach the front upper inside corner of the camera, which will provide for the forming of a loop above and below the shuttle mechanism, and with the finger press down the shuttle guide latch, Fig. 3, No. 9. Now the shuttle bar release button, Fig. 3, No. 8, should be pressed and the shuttle bar and its pins drawn back from the path of film between the two sections of the aperture register leaf, Fig. 3, No. 7.

Still holding the shuttle bar back, the film is inserted between the two sections of the register leaf, and slide up and down until the shuttle bar pins enter the film perforations and the bar returns to its original position. This can be told by the release button, Fig. 3, No. 8, having returned to its normal position. The shuttle guide latch, Fig. 3, No. 9, is returned to its vertical position as in Fig. 3, and the upper sprocket latch and rollers, Fig. 3, Nos. 2 and 3, are closed after seeing that the film perforations engage the sprocket teeth. After giving the crank a couple of turns, to see that all is running smoothly, the camera door may be closed and the instrument will be ready for use.

As will also be noted by reference to the cuts, there is on the Bell and Howell camera a footage indicator, Fig. 1, No. 13, and a view finder, shown in Fig. 1, No. 12, and in Fig. 2, No. 10. The lenses are seen in Fig. 1, Nos. 9, 10 and 11.

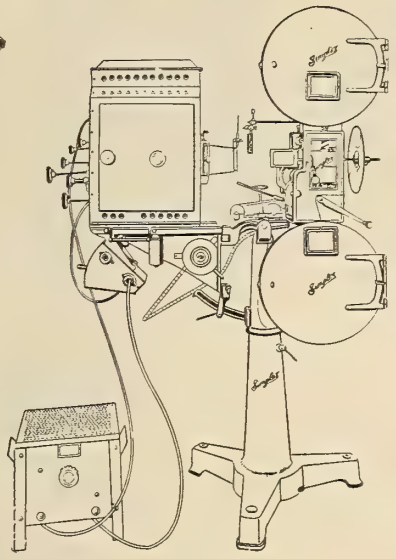
The actuating parts of the shuttle may be noted in Fig. 2, No. 5 being the shuttle, and No. 6 the eccentric which rocks it. No. 3 in Fig. 2 is the register leaf mounting. No. 4 shows the rear of the pilot register pins and the nuts which secure the pins to the aperture plate, while the intermediate driving gear is indicated by No. 7.

The camera has a film punch or marker, Fig. 3, No. 11, and the punch guard roller belonging to same, Fig. 3, No. 12.

The camera should be kept clean and sparingly oiled. The bent end of the film inserted in the supply spool should not be allowed to pass through the shuttle, it being advisable to stop the camera just before the film runs out.

Repairs should always be executed by the makers of the camera.

TWO CARLOADS OF SEEBURG PIPE ORGANS SHIPPED FROM CHICAGO TO SOUTHWEST



TWO carloads of Seeburg pipe-organs and self-playing orchestras of various styles were shipped this week from the Chicago factory. One carload was sent to the Southwest to fill orders from that territory and the other was sent to an Eastern dealer. The Seeburg factory is now working overtime to fill the orders now on hand for their instruments.

J. E. Gerlick, general manager of the Seeburg Piano Company has just returned from a week's trip through the Northwest territory. Mr. Gerlick reports business conditions in the Northwest as being excellent, and is very much pleased with the progressiveness of the theatres in that district. As a result of the trip, two Seeburg organs, one costing $2,250 and the other $5,000, will be shipped immediately, and several more of the Seeburg instruments have been ordered for May delivery.

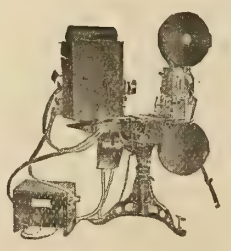
LAKIN IS AWARDED LITHOGRAPHS CONTRACT FOR MOTION PICTURE BOARD OF TRADE EXHIBIT IN NEW YORK

JOHN M. LAKIN has been elected president of the Acme Lithographing Company. In the opinion of those whom he has served in the post, Mr. Lakin's co-operation has been surpassing. His work has not only been of such merit as to draw forth the highest commendations of his customers, but has attracted such notice as to cause comment among exhibitors and the public. So pronounced has been the character of Mr. Lakin's service and lithographs that he has recently secured the much-coveted order to supply the lithographs for the Motion Picture Board of Trade Exhibitors at the Madison Square Garden in competition with some twenty-five competitive sketches.

JOHN M. LAKIN

One of Mr. Lakin's oldest customers, in speaking recently concerning the quality of his service, said: "In my twenty-five years of business experience I have never met anyone who so thoroughly embodied the consciousness of service as John M. Lakin. Not only has he devoted himself to our business personally, but he has spent hours of his time in thinking up new ideas that would be of advantage to us. As a result he has perfected his product and added to the prestige of our company."

Business acquaintances of Mr. Lakin are now prognosticating that the Acme Lithographing Company, under Mr. Lakin's direction, will assume a very high place in this branch of the motion picture industry.



DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN STRAND, KY., AND OPERATORS' UNION SETTLED

THE disagreement between the management of the Strand theatre and the Louisville, Ky., union of motion picture machine operators growing out of the discharge of two union operators recently has been settled. A settlement was agreed upon after a conference of representatives of the union and the theatre management.

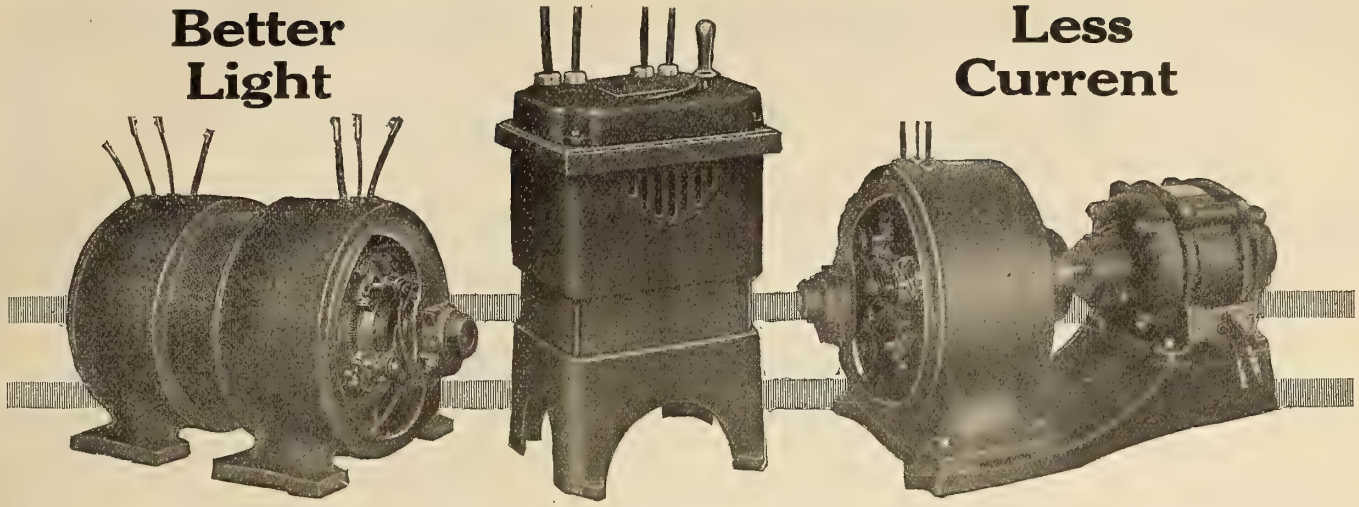
The theatre has agreed to employ two union operators, thus making the house a strictly union one, as the members of the orchestra and all other employes are members of unions. A statement of the agreement has been announced by E. W. Clay, business manager of Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 163.

THE EASIEST

The Standard was the first machine to originate and use worth while devices: the motor drive, the large lamphouse, the 2,000 and 3,000-ft. magazines and reels were first used by the Standard. Standard Motion Picture Machines were first to have the wearing parts case-hardened, and to be equipped with a fire shutter controlled by governor instead of by unreliable friction devices.

THE MASTER MODEL PROJECTOR

TO OPERATE



The Standard projector has all essential devices for facilitating handling, for the finest projection, but possesses no questionable improvements that only hinder the operator. You can thread a Standard faster than any other make; you will find it easiest to run, most durable, profitable to instal.

The Camera

A Department Devoted to Motion Picture Photography in All Its Phases, Studio and Laboratory Work.

Rules for Exhibitors Planning Films for Weeklies

Negatives Developed Before Submission to Editors Are Not Acceptable—From Sixty to One Hundred Feet Is Average Length Generally Bought When Event Is of Ordinary Interest—Make Sure of Sending Your Subjects by Fastest Express Company and Never Use the Mail

THE progressive exhibitor, who is provided with his own camera for filming local scenes and happenings, can frequently put himself in the way of making some extra money, and, in fact, made his camera pay for itself, by becoming a contributor to the Weekly news films.

In order to succeed in such a venture certain requirements must be met and adhered to.

In the first place the editors of the Newsfilms do not, as a rule, consider negatives which have been developed prior to being submitted to them. To guarantee exclusiveness, they require the film after exposure to be sent them immediately. They will develop the film in the very best manner (no charge being made for this) and examine it, buying such portions as they can use. Any topical negative purchased by the various weeklies will be paid for at the rate of from sixty cents to one dollar per foot.

Unless the event you propose to film is of nation wide importance, or something which may happen but once in a lifetime, do not expose a whole lot of stock. From sixty to one hundred feet of negative is the average which the Newsfilm editors will purchase of an event of ordinary interest, and sometimes considerably less.

The person who wishes to achieve success in news photography must cultivate a sense of news values, or let us say, he must know "what to take." Many of the items frequently seen in the Weeklies of a couple of years ago are not acceptable now. For instance: Parade scenes and unveilings of monuments have no great value nowadays and are rarely acceptable unless attended by the President or some celebrity or well known personage.

Conventions and Delegate Groups Not Acceptable

Conventions and groups of delegates to such affairs, generally very self conscious before the camera, are not favored by editors of News Weeklies. Unless a show or exhibition has some strange or exceptional exhibits a film should not be made of it.

It is easy to define a good news film subject. Such a subject is one which tells its own story and does not need a lot of lengthy explanatory titles to "get it over."

Those who contribute to Topical Weeklies can greatly enhance the value of their offerings by learning where to place the camera to secure the best effect. Instead of filming a scene from just one viewpoint, take two scenes from different distances.

First photograph the scene from a fair distance showing the principal figure or object and its environment, and then come close to the subject and take another view showing the more intimate details. In this way the utmost is gotten out of the situation and many experienced camera correspondents follow the procedure.

Races of different kinds are sometimes filmed, and to get the speed and snap to a subject of this character, which will make it sell readily, the camera should only be cranked at about half speed. A news cameraman should always be on the alert to take advantage of these dodges for enhancing the value of his stuff. Once in a while a free-lance cameraman, whose contributions have shown that he has a keen appreciation of news values, is called in to hold down a staff job on a Weekly news film.

About 100-Foot Lengths Stand Best Chance of Acceptance

As stated above, about one hundred feet of an event is the most which has a chance of acceptance. This should consist of several different scenes to give variety to the offering. Ten feet is enough to expose on a still or inanimate object, showing no action, while not less than fifteen or twenty feet should be taken of objects in motion to constitute a scene.

It is a matter of considerable importance that the aperture or frame line in your camera shall coincide with that in use by the firm to which you submit the negatives you have made. If possible have your frame line adjusted to their standard. Failure to do this will cost you some sales, but some of the better equipped concerns can re-perforate a negative taken with cameras which do not space the pictures as theirs do. If re-perforating has to be resorted to it is likely they would not pay as much as for negative with the correct frame line.

Having successfully filmed a subject, most persons would think that the most important part of the work was finished. This is most emphatically not the case in topical work.

Getting the film to your Weekly quick is half the battle. With the activities of the newspapers to combat, it does not take long for a film subject of topical nature to get "stale" and thus become unacceptable.

At the very outset of one's activities in contributing to News films the best express company and the fastest train for quickly forwarding the news negatves should be given consideration. Do not under any circumstances try to send your film negatives by mail. As motion picture films are barred from the mails, confiscation is possible should this be done.

Do Not Send Film by Mail

Find out which train leaving your locality each day is the fastest and best to ship the stuff on, and patronize the express company which has the best connections and can give you the quickest service.

Do not be discouraged by a few rejections. If you cannot land a topical subject with the editors at the start perhaps you might be able to send them a scenic which would appeal. Although the scenery in your section may seem very commonplace to you, people in other localities might like it immensely. A film of the most picturesque spots in your section might be readily accepted if treated artistically and due care given to perfection in the photographic quality also.

It will be found best in the long run to stick to some one concern instead of hawking your negative around to all of the Weeklies, and in the long run you may find the proposition very remunerative.

NEW JERSEY MOTION PICTURE SUPPLY COMPANY OPENS HOUSE IN NEWARK

A NEW supply house has been opened in Newark, N. J., called the New Jersey Motion Picture Supply Company, under the auspices of V. A. Schauler, L. B. Wolven and J. R. Walsh, all well-known among the Newark theatre interests.

This addition should be of great value to the theatres in Newark, as it will mean immediate service.

Arthur F. Dunn, of the Speed Controller Company, announces that he has appointed this new company as sole agents for the sale of the Speedco Arc Controllers in the northern New Jersey territory.

CORRECT FORMULA FOR NEGATIVE REVERSING PROCESS

THROUGH an oversight in printing, the formulæ in connection with the negative reversing process, which appeared in the Camera Department last week, were not arranged in such form as to be easily understandable, and contained a typographical error. The amount of potassium bromide in the re-developer given as a fifty per cent. solution should have read five per cent. solution. As there will probably be many who would like to try the reversing of negatives we publish again the complete formulæ in tabulated form to be used in connection with the complete instructions contained in the previous article.

COMMISSION IN JOPLIN, MO., PASSES ORDINANCE FOR REGULATION OF PROJECTION AND AN EQUIPMENT INSTALLMENT

THE city commission of Joplin, Mo., recently passed an ordinance, introduced by Commissioner J. B. Hodgdon and City Attorney E. F. Cameron, which provides for the regulation of the installation, operation and maintenance of motion picture machines, and of the construction and arrangement of theatres.

It is believed that this ordinance will eliminate the fire hazard and make it necessary that all motion picture houses establish new regulations that will fully protect the public. The power of arrest has been placed in the hands of the fire chief, and the violator can be fined a sum not over one hundred dollars or less than ten dollars.

It is his plan to extend his present building in the rear and also the newly acquired building and remove the center wall between the buildings, thus converting the space into one theatre with a seating capacity of approximately 800. When the alterations have been made, he will have secured a room about 120 feet deep and 45 feet wide.

The Paramount theatre at Winston-Salem, has discontinued vaudeville, tabloid and stock, and will show pictures exclusively in future.

The Broadway theatre in Gastonia recently installed a Seeburg unit orchestra, and the new music is increasing the attendance.

OHIO

The Rex Theatre building on Market street, Steubenville, owned by the McCoy estate, and leased by H. M. Low and released to W. J. Curn, who operates the moving picture house, has been ordered closed by Mayor McMaster, following notification from State authorities who declare the building to be unsafe in its present condition.

Henry Levy and Jesse Meis, owners of the Empire Theatre Company, Cincinnati, now controlling two photo-play houses, have added the third amusement place to their list, taking over the Park theatre, in Northside, the deal involving about $50,000. The building, located on the west side of Hamilton avenue, near Chase street, contains 600 seats, has its own electric-light plant and the mushroom system of ventilation. The property was improved by the Park Theatre Company, being finished just about a year ago.

W. O. Borman has bought the Amuse-U theatre, Celina, The new manager took possession April 10. At that time the theatre closed for extensive repairs and will be remodeled and made into a picture house.

There will be another moving picture show in Alliance very soon with John Palfii and Steven Saus as proprietors. What is known as the Gotschling building on East Broadway is being remodeled according to plans drawn by Architect Matchett for a moving picture theatre to seat 175 to 200 and will be completed as soon as possible, the work being under way at present.

OKLAHOMA

Edward Ward, manager of the Majestic theatre at Ada, died suddenly at that place April 4. Mr. Ward was 55 years old and formerly resided at Ardmore.

The Yale Theatre Company will build a moving picture theatre at Yale, in the near future.

The Cozy theatre at Shawnee is to be remodeled and enlarged.

The Palace theatre at Hobart was burned recently at a loss of $5,000.

The Liberty theatre at McAlester was closed and dismantled April 1. Former Manager John A. Steinson has accepted a traveling position with the V-L-S-E headquarters at Dallas, Texas.

Douglas Steinson has accepted the managership of the Queen theatre at Sulphur.

The Yale-Majestic theatre at McAlester was reopened April 10, after having been dark for the past month to permit remodeling. The seating capacity has been increased to 800.

The De Luxe theatre was opened at Bristow April 1 with a 500 seating capacity. Both pictures and vaudeville will be run.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Lyric theatre, Altoona, a new moving picture playhouse erected by Contractors J. C. Orr and Son, for ex-Sheriff William H. Orr, is completed, and opened for public patronage on April 15. The new structure is located at Sixth alley and Fourth street, and is one of the most imposing structures in that section of the city. In addition to a commodious theatre, the building has two store rooms on the ground floor.

Music and the Picture

Defends His Selection of Music for "The Yaqui"

Director in Charge of Music for Circuit of Loew Theatres Points Out Absurdity of Criticisms Made by M. Winkler, Who in Going Out of His Way to Find Fault Inadvertently Reveals the Limitations of His Own Knowledge of the Subject

FOR the first time since I have taken the editorship of the Music and the Picture Department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS it becomes my duty to defend myself and my efforts. Under date of April 8, the following article under the heading of "Only One Authorized Bluebird Score," by M. Winkler, appeared in the Moving Picture Weekly:

In the issue of April 1 of the Motion Picture News, Mr. Ernst Lutz is publishing a so-called musical cue sheet of the Bluebird photoplay, "The Yaqui." I have very often seen such musical sheets selected by Mr. Lutz, but was never able to criticize them, as they always happened to be selected for features which I had never seen, but in this instance it happens to be a film which is manufactured by the Bluebird Photo Plays (Inc.), a company which is printing specially arranged music for all their features, and as I am the one who arranges these scores, I am in a position to say and prove that the musical cue sheet as published in the above mentioned trade paper by no means represents this picture musically. Let us now analyze both Mr. Lutz's cue sheet and the printed score and see which is the better.

No. 1.—Mr. Lutz begins with the "Tomahawk Dance," by Heiman, a very good number, to be played until title, "Senor Estaban, a wealthy land owner." This number opens with an introduction lasting about fifty seconds, followed by a characteristic Indian dance. According to Mr. Lutz's suggestions, this number must be played for about 140 seconds, and scenes for playing the working season by the ranches will be accompanied by a real Indian characteristic dance.

No. 2.—For the scene following that, the title, "I have come to work for the hand of Senora," etc. (the title explains the situation), Mr. Lutz is playing "Dark Eyes," an old Mexican characteristic dance. (See Bluebird Score, Cue No. 3, and compare it with the above described scene.)

No. 3.—The next scene portrays an Indian festival in San Francisco. Mr. Lutz used "Chanson Russe," a Russian fantasy, by Smith. (See Bluebird Score, Cue No. 6.)

No. 4.—The next scene, the Indian chief of the Yaquis (Tambor) is to be shot when the bell of Santa Catarina will ring. Think of such a scene and play "The Serenade," by Schubert, with bell effects. (See Bluebird Score, Cue No. 9.)

No. 5.—Title on picture: "Next Morning." The Yaqui chief escapes on a train and signals his people of his presence. "Valse Slave," a hestitation waltz, is Mr. Lutz's accompaniment. (See Bluebird Score, Cue No. 12.)

No. 6.—Title on picture: "The Beginning of Hostilities," portraying Mexican revolutions. Now, gentle reader, look at such scenes and listen to "Chanson Sans Paroles," by Tschaikowsky—Tschaikowsky music, the Yaquis and Mexican revolutions—a great combination—followed by the minor and major hesitation waltz by McGee. (See Bluebird Score, Cues, Nos. 18, 19 and 20.)

I should think the above proof enough.

Now, then, I have not written to disparage others, but to protect myself. I am a Bluebird man. I am working for the Bluebird, and I absolutely refuse to have such work as this senseless cue sheet blamed on me. I want everyone to know that no cue sheet or musical accompaniment issued for any of these excellent features is my creation, except the one officially issued and distributed by all Bluebird exchanges.

Not Advocating Any Particular Musical Publications

For Mr. Winkler's better information and to assure him that he is right, I want to claim the sole authorship of the music plot which appears in MOTION PICTURE NEWS of April 1 for the Bluebird feature, "The Yaqui." I have never seen the Bluebird music score for "The Yaqui" that Mr. Winkler speaks of, and, had I done so, I would not have wasted valuable editorial space in criticizing it.

I know for a fact from my many communications that my readers are capable of all necessary criticism, and, as I am not an agitator nor exploiting any certain musical publications, music publishers or motion pictures, it has never before become necessary to allow anything to appear in this department unless it were educational or beneficial to the musician or picture theatre.

Either Mr. Winkler is not thoroughly conversant with the English language or my cue sheets lack clarity. For my personal vindication and his education, it is necessary for me to point out that his number 1, number 2, number 3, number 4, number 5 and number 6 are perversions of fact, and the result of an overworked and skeptical imagination. Before my statements of fact I feel that my readers should know who Mr. Winkler is.

Speaking of "Numbers," He Gets Mr. Winkler's

About five years ago, when I first made Mr. Winkler's acquaintance, he was selling band and orchestra music for Carl Fischer. During this time I have never heard of Mr. Winkler having charge of a picture theatre, or playing to pictures.

At the present time Mr. Winkler is still connected with the Carl Fischer music publishing house.

In number one, note that Mr. Winkler takes exception to my "Tommy Hawk" dance suggestion. Nevertheless, he gives it credit for being a very good number. This number is published by Carl Fischer. If this is a real Indian characteristic dance I wish to know which tribe of Indians used it. For number two, while I suggested "Dark Eyes," my notes state that any Mexican or Spanish serenade will do. The locale and costuming in the scenes that follow require this character of music.

Mr. Winkler's objection to this suggestion is not quite clear, in my mind, but I suppose I should have suggested a Carl Fischer number. Number three is nothing more than a mis-statement of fact on the part of Mr. Winkler. The number "Chanson Russe" is played during the plotting scenes that precede the Indian festival scenes. If he used correct methods for determining when number three was to stop, or if he positively knows his picture, he will know that the festival scenes open after the title "The Yaquis Are Assembled," for which I suggest a 2/4 Indian dance.

To complete my score, I mention the "Zephyr," published by M. Witmark. His number four is still a greater mis-statement of facts, as, according to my cue sheet, there is positively no music during the ringing of the church bell. I certainly hope that Mr. Winkler does not think that the "Serenade" by Shubert is not good music, for I know that it is. It happens to be in minor key, and while it is melodious, it has a plaintive appeal, which I desire for the resurrection scenes that follow.

Mr. Winkler has known me long enough to know that I do not select music according to the titles or descriptions printed by the publishers of musical numbers. I select music only according to its temperamental effect upon the audience. I contend that music, when properly selected, can make you laugh and cry. Number five is explained in my previous writings. "Valse Slave" was called a hesitation waltz by the people who published it. The composer was thinking of a dissatisfied and miserable populace; consequently, he adopted the minor tone. For this reason I suggested it in the given spot in my cue sheet.

Some More Information for the Music Salesman

Number six is positively ridiculous, for if Mr. Winkler knows anything about the picture he is talking about, he knows that until the title "The American Side" the action is positively of a plot-ting nature, and all the revolution scenes follow the above mentioned title.

I should think that Mr. Winkler would appreciate Tschaikowsky music, as it is no longer necessary to pay any royalties on these compositions. I don't use Tschaikowsky for any such reason, but as a musician, I know that he has handled the minor keys like a master, and when a real musician thinks of something aboriginal, immediately minor keys buzz in his ears. I should think the above proof enough.

What it proves I leave to my readers.

I should highly appreciate hearing from all my readers who don't understand my music plots any better than Mr. Winkler seems to understand them, and would be only too glad to give them any information desired.

I was given an opportunity to open a new theatre with this same picture on April 8 in New York City. I played and conducted the orchestra personally, and the picture with its musical program was very highly appreciated. I assure my readers that they cannot get a more pleasing musical program that will both fit the picture and play easily, than the one published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS under date of April 1.

I want to mention here that in reading the music notes accompanying my plots, that I issue, you will notice that the numbers are only suggestions, and by the explanations appearing in "Music Notes" you will be able to make any musical substitutions you may desire, thereby making the program to your own satisfaction.

Mr. Winkler being a salesman, may have recognized in my plot an opportunity for the exhibitor and musician to give the picture "Yaqui" a musical program without any outlay of money, thereby making this music score he mentions of less financial value. I want to assure him that it appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS as a usual event, with no intention of making any comparison with his score or to impair its rental value.

Mr. Winkler may be interested to know that I have just received information from a reliable source that the Triangle will not have any more music scores written to their future releases, but will issue suggestions instead.

Rest assured, good reader, that the future of "Music and the Picture" depends upon the capable musician, and that after it is brought to some sane and final issue, the musician will receive his rightful compensation for his work. The music publisher will also receive his fair share after he caters to the successful musician instead of trying to force upon him conditions which cannot be met in seventy-five per cent. of the present picture theatres.

UNUSUAL IN MUSIC IS A NOVELTY APPRECIATED BY THE PUBLIC

E. Tovey, Fayetteville, Ark.:

I received your letter of April 5, and would advise you to ignore the letter which you enclosed. From the tone of the letter I would suppose that the writer must have had some understanding or misunderstanding with his manager, who had probably read your little article.

The combination the writer mentions in his letter is of little consequence, because it happens to be the usual combination set together by any and all musicians. When you get good results from unusual combinations it proves that you are a musician, and the unusual is always a novelty to the public when done well.

There is an old saying that when you cannot get something good, you might better do without.

Don't let this discourage you, and keep up the good work. I would publish the letter you sent me were it worth while, and were I sure that it would not be misconstrued as cheap comedy; for, to say the least, it is a ridiculously impolite and uncalled-for communication.

Music Notes: All music for this picture should have dramatic depth. Care should be taken that the music remain melodious as well.

Nos. 1, 7, 10, 13, 14, 16 and 23 should be very slow melodious numbers of slight dramatic effect. Nos. 3, 18 and 20 should be slow numbers having positive heavy dramatic appeal. Do not be boisterous.

Nos. 2, 6, 11, 15 and 19 are all slow melodious waltz movements with very legato theme. No. 5 should be a slow number in minor key. It must portray death. Nos. 8 and 20 should be 2/4 movements in minor key, not slow.

No. 12 should be a light 2/4 intermezzo. Nos. 4, 9, 17 and 22 should be short specially adapted numbers accentuating melodramatic moments. The picture can be played throughout with good effect on the organ.

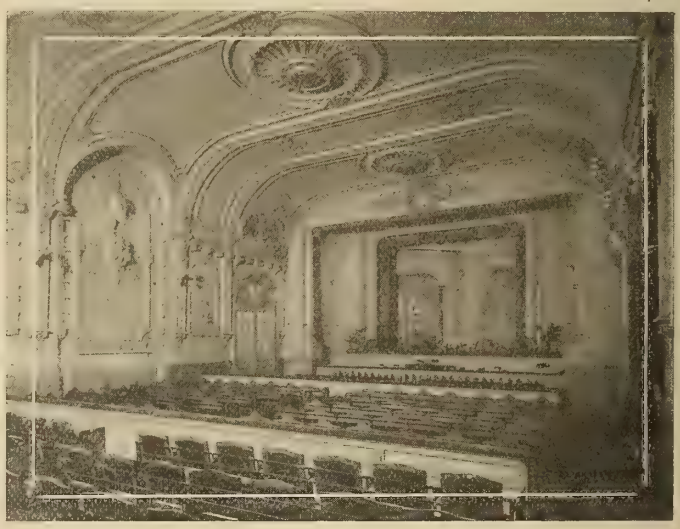
Paris Picture Palaces Paragons of Perfection

The Omnia Pathe, Pathe Palace, Cinema Palace, Gaumont Palace and Tivoli Cimena, Enjoying Big Patronage, Are Numbered Among the Most Progressive Theatres in the City—Beautiful Decorations, Excellent Music and Exhibition of Best Films Draw Large Patronage

THE popularity of motion pictures in Paris, and the progress made in their exhibition, are strikingly illustrated by the modern theatres found today in several sections of the city. Five of these—The Omina Pathé, Pathé Palace, Cinema Palace, Gaumont Palace, and Tivoli Cinema—are enjoying big patronage, and are among the most progressive in catering to the comfort of patrons.



In this group, the Omnia Pathé, because of its location on the main boulevards, its beautiful decorations, and its high-class music, draws the best people of the French capital. The theatre is entered under a large canopy from which hang two huge lanterns and a bronze garland, with supporting columns, at each side. Through the first vestibule, itself beautifully decorated, one reaches the second vestibule and the waiting room, whose ornamental columns and rich furnishings are reflected in mirrors placed around the walls. This vestibule also contains the stairway to the boxes and the balcony.

Finally, the main auditorium is reached. It has a seating capacity of 600, while there are seats for 160 more in the balcony. Wide aisles afford easy access, and there is a clear view of the screen from every part of the house. The same richness of decoration is carried out in the auditorium. The theatre is built of stone and iron, ventilated from the ceiling, and lighted by electricity. Its dimensions are 23 metres long by 20 wide.

Four shows are given daily, each of six reels, and Pathé subjects are those mostly used. The orchestra of seventeen musicians is one of the best in Paris.

The Omnia Pathé is owned by the Societie Omnia, and managed by Benoit Levy. Advertising is carried in all the Paris papers.

Gaumont Palace Seating Capacity Is Large

Though not so pretentious in its decorations, the Gaumont Palace with 1,800 seats on the main floor and 2,200 in the balcony, is doing an enormous business.

Built originally for a hippodrome, and used by Frank C. Bostock for his wild animal show, it was taken over by Gaumont six years ago, and converted into a cinema.

It is situated on the Place Clichy, and is 120 meters long by 82 wide. An orchestra of fifty is employed. Two shows are given daily, each of ten reels. The manager is Mr. Costil, and the owner the Societe des Establissements Gaumont. Twenty-eight employees look after the convenience of the crowds which throng the house daily.

Next in size to the Gaumont Palace is the Tivoli Cinema, with a capacity of 3,000, confined entirely to one floor. This theatre also has an interesting history. Of wooden construction, it served first as a skating rink, and later as a dance hall until it became a cinema under the ownership of the Societe d'Amusements six years ago. Up to three years ago it had only one entrance—on Rue Beaurepair—and business was poor. After a second entrance was made on Rue Faubourg de Temple, patronage at once picked up, and is now very large.

The best films obtainable are shown twice daily, and these are advertised extensively on billboards all over Paris and in the newspapers. An orchestra of 30, and a house staff of 16, work under the management of Mr. Sandberg. A Pathé projection machine is used, the length of the throw being 40 meters. Openings on the roof give adequate ventilation. Electricity is used for lighting.

A GLIMPSE OF THE GAUMONT PALACE, PARIS

The Cinema Gives Show in Daylight

Smaller than the Gaumont and the Tivoli are the Cinema Palace, and the Pathé Palace, seating 800 and 900, respectively. The Cinema is the only picture theatre in Paris giving a kinema show in daylight. This is done by means of a special arrangement by which the screen is set in a large hood open in front, which shuts out all light from the rest of the house, and permits the picture to be seen with perfect distinctness.

The Cinema's general interior decorations are severely plain and its lobby is small. Its location on the main boulevards, however, insures good patronage, and it has found American subjects profitable. Open windows are used for ventilating. The dimensions are 22 meters long by 18 wide, and the exterior is of stone and brick. Six shows are given during the daylight hours, and three at night, music being furnished by an orchestra of seven. This house is owned by Mr. Frankfurt, who is also the manager. He has six employees.

The Pathé Palace, situated on the Boulevard des Italiens, and owned by the Societe des Cinemas Exploitation, is of iron and stone construction, with an electric ventilation system. The interior decorations are in the style of Louis XVI. Only Pathé films are shown, six reels being the length of the five daily performances. Mr. Lelievre is the manager, and the house commands fair business.

MOVIE INN, A SHOW PLACE OF CHICAGO, IS RENDEZVOUS OF MIDDLE WEST FILM MEN

THE reputation of many cafes in the Latin Quarter of Paris was acquired through the patronage of artists and sculptors, and the fame of certain Rialto establishments in New York by a clientele of stage celebrities. The Movie Inn of Chicago has become one of the show places of the city through its catering to those engaged in the film industry. Although the enterprise was launched only last July, it has already become the rendezvous of Middle Western actors, producers, exchange men and exhibitors.

The walls of the Inn are covered with large pictures of popular screen stars, arranged according to company affiliations, and the lighting is diffused through transparent glass panels on which likenesses of film favorites are painted. Around the walls cozy spaces have been partitioned, each one reserved for members of some film company or organization.

There is a large dancing floor, and the place is famous for the syncopated music furnished by the two Inn orchestras and the cafe-type Bartola. This Bartola is of a different design from the ones installed in theatres throughout the country. Realizing the demand for a high-class, one-man orchestra for use in restaurants and cafes, the Bartola Company has produced an instrument especially designed for these places. The manager of the Movie Inn was keen enough to see the merits of the new model, and is congratulating himself on making the investment.

The management makes a feature of its excellent cuisine, which is under the supervision of Monsieur La Peruque, formerly chef of the Hotel La Salle.

Two hundred and fifty persons can be accommodated on the main floor, one hundred and fifty in the balcony and one hundred and fifty in the club rooms of the Reel Fellows which connect with the Inn. The Reel Fellows Club is a society composed of Chicago film people. The furnishings and decorations of their rooms are tasteful and appropriate. The rooms are used for the entertainments and banquets of the club.

INTERIOR OF THE MOVIE INN, CHICAGO

A special bureau is maintained by the Movie Inn for the purpose of furnishing its out-of-town patrons with information regarding local film people and companies. This service ought to be particularly valuable to the hundreds of exhibitors who will visit Chicago during the convention in July.

The capacity of this resort is nearly always crowded, and the success of the venture has been so substantial that the Movie Inn Corporation has obtained a charter for New York State and will shortly open a similar establishment in New York City. The Movie Inn, Inc., is under the management of George E. Powell, Barney Balaban and A. G. Spencer, a triumvirate that represents wide experience and knowledge in both the moving picture and restaurant businesses.

The installation of the Bartola was completed April 1 and the day after a special concert was given for the benefit of Movie Inn guests. The main instrument is located on one end of the balcony and the Echo attachment occupies the other end. The effect is really remarkable, and every number was applauded by the guests. The operator showed the versatility of the instrument by first playing a classical selection and then following it by irresistible dance syncopations.

WOMEN'S CLUB IN SAN FRANCISCO WANTS "STAR SPANGLED BANNER" PLAYED IN THEATRES

THE San Francisco Chapter of the Women's Section of the Navy League has been making an active campaign to have "The Star-Spangled Banner" played at all performances in local theatres, and it is announced that the co-operation of nine theatres has been secured.

The Dream of the Progressive

An Instructive, Interesting and Amusing Feature in Monthly Installments devoted to those interested in the theatrical and motion picture business.

Entirely Original Treatment of Familiar Topics

Fifty cents brings this incomparable booklet to you each month for one year and in each issue the goods are delivered.
The Stage Hand finds in it an old friend who talks familiarly of the things which interest him. The Motion Picture Machine Operator praises the technical hints of practical value contained and the amusement afforded by the quaint sayings of friend Tim. Others enjoy it because of its piquant originality.

SALE OF GRINDEN ART METAL BOOTHS GROWS; DISTRIBUTORS APPOINTED

W. J. GRINDEN of the Grinden Art Metal Company, 417 Marcy avenue, Brooklyn, New York, reports that he is making exceptional progress in the distribution of his line of booths.

He has already begun to appoint distributors to handle the goods throughout the country.

These distributors consist in the main of supply houses who report that aside from theatre use, the booth is being received with exceptional favor by churches, schools and clubs.

One of the principal sales points is that it is easily taken down after the show and stored in a very small space, thus avoiding the necessity of having a large object around which is not in continual use.

BEDDING MANAGES PUBLICITY FOR NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY

THOMAS BEDDING has been appointed publicity director of the Novelty Slide Company, one of the largest slide manufacturing concerns in the business. This company, which has recently leased an entire floor in the new fireproof building 115-117 East Twenty-third street, New York, contemplates vast extensions to its business. Its two publications, Novelty Notes and Rays of Light, will be issued under the editorship of Mr. Bedding, whose photographic and motion picture knowledge should be of value. Mr. Bedding states that the atmosphere of Twenty-third street is congenial and exhilarating. He started his New York career there over seven years ago and desires to remain in the locality.

METCALFE, WHO HANDLES SPEER CARBONS, PUTS THROUGH BIG DEAL

A BUSINESS transaction of considerable importance has been closed by G. A. Metcalfe, who conducts a large supply business on the Pacific Coast, with headquarters on Film Row, San Francisco, whereby he has been made wholesale distributor of Speer carbons made by the Speer Carbon Company of St. Marys, Pa.

Mr. Metcalfe now has the Pacific Coast covered in a very thorough manner, having a large branch at Seattle to care for the Northwest and maintaining an interest in the branch recently opened at Los Angeles.

MOTOR-RUN MACHINES ALLOWED IN TOPEKA, IF EQUIPPED WITH AUTOMATIC SHUTTER

A. E. SUTTON, electrical inspector, Topeka, Kan., recently announced that his office would allow the use of motor-run moving picture projecting machines where the machine carried the automatic shutter. This shutter drops whenever the motor stops, thus obviating the danger of the inflammable film catching fire from the heat of the light, a possibility whenever the film is stopped a few seconds in front of the strong light of the projecting lantern.

EXHIBITOR:

The Campaign Needs You! Join Hands and Help Collect $500,000 By May 16th 1916

Please contribute 10% or more of the receipts of your theatre on National Motion Picture Tribute Day, May 15th, 1916.

The Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America solicits your co-operation and help.

Only a few weeks remain—do your share—in helping to raise the $500,000 for the most justifiable endowment that was ever projected—many of our peaceful, kindly profession are in need in their later years and we who have health and strength should help them. The best way to help is by making this endowment sure, and it is our duty to do that—the help of Exhibitors is imperative.

The actor helps everyone—every community in times of calamity but actors have not been helped much. We must set the public a good example and the public will help us endow the Actors' Home and the Actors' Fund. The public will surely pack your theatres on National Motion Picture Tribute Day. Many exhibitors have already agreed to give more than 10% of their particular day—

WILL YOU HELP—WILL YOU GIVE 10%—IF YOU HAVEN'T AGREED PLEASE WRITE OR WIRE NOW SAYING THAT YOU WILL
